Strikes Halt Arms Orders, Peril Detroit Transport

Lewis Threatens To Call Out 300,000 Coal Miners; Work Stops in Colt Plant

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

In swift and alarming succession strikes outbreaks in defense industries accumulated yesterday to form one of the darkest pictures of labor stoppages in recent weeks.

As Monday's strike of 1,700 machinists in San Francisco shipyards continued to tie up more than $500,000,000 of naval construction, other strikes halted work on $30,000,000 of armament orders, threatened transportation in the key defense center of Detroit, and slashed production in more than 20 Chicago foundries.

At the same time, John L. Lewis, C. I. O. United Mine Workers president, threatened a repetition of the soft coal strike, by warning he would again call out 300,000 to 400,000 miners unless current negotiations with Southern operators reached an agreement by next Tuesday.

Meantime, negotiations of a Mediation Board panel with General Motors Corporation management representatives and leader of the C. I. O.-U. A. W. were resumed here yesterday afternoon. After a dinner recess, they continued last night, but no agreement was reached and the sessions were recessed until this morning. The union has issued a strike call for tomorrow affecting about 90 plants and 160,000 workers, unless a settlement is reached on demands for a 10-cent-an-hour wage increase and a union shop.

Yesterday's principal labor developments:

1. Approximately 5,600 workers walked out of the Hartford (Conn.) plant of Colt's Patent Firearms Co., producing $30,000,000 worth of cannon, machine guns and side arms for the Army and Britain. Although the C. I. O., United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers claimed it had not called the strike, its officers said workers had authorized it to negotiate on demands for higher wages, the principal issue of the dispute. Both management and union indicated willingness to confer today with representatives of the Connecticut State Mediation Board and OPM Labor Representative Thomas F. Burns.

2. In Chicago, more than a score of iron and brass foundries were affected by a strike of 2,300 molders and other foundry workers. The strike was called by the A. F. of L. International Molders' Union, seeking wage increases. OPM labor expert, Joseph Keenan, who sought to end the stoppage, said defense orders were indirectly involved.

3. OPM labor officials, disturbed at an intensification of an A. F. of L. teamsters' strike in Detroit, later requested Keenan to move on to Detroit and report on the situation. Spread of the strike might seriously damage movement of supplies and finished products in the entire industrial area, it was indicated.

4. Declaring he was "not impressed with the progress" of a conference with Southern coal operators, John L. Lewis said he had "no desire to continue this uncertainty in the industry" and would call a stoppage in both Northern and Southern mines of the Appalachian area unless a settlement were reached. Lewis is negotiating with representatives of the Southern mine owners to eliminate a 40-cent differential between the two regions, following a settlement of the 30-day coal strike in April un-

Shake-up Seen In Police, Fire Departments

Commissioners Request Data on Physical Fitness Of Men Over 55

A contemplated shakeup among older members of the Police and Fire Departments was seen at the District Building yesterday when the Commissioners requested a detailed analysis of the physical fitness of every man over 55.

Commissioner J. Russell Young said the order to the Board of Police Surgeons "speaks for itself" and declined further comment.

The order affects several high-ranking officers in both departments, including Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, who is 66.

The board of surgeons was instructed to submit an immediate report to the Commissioners—"in each case definitely stating whether or not the one examined is fully physically capable of performing the duties of his position and rank."

In line with a policy adopted in 1925, members of both departments over 55 received their annual medical examination on April 29 and May 6. A total of 79 men reported for the checkup and it is the results of these tests which the Commissioners have requested.

Maj. Brown was absent from the city yesterday and could not be reached for comment. In the past, however, when the question of his retirement has come up, the major has scoffed at his stepping out because of physical unfitness.

Inspector B. W. Thompson, chief of detectives, who is 62, had this to say:

"I have given the public my best for 32 years and I think I am physically capable of carrying on. However, the Commissioners are my su-

House Approves 85% Farm Parity

The House yesterday agreed to Senate insistence on increasing the Government loan rates on wheat, cotton, corn, tobacco and rice to 85 per cet of parity.

Agriculture Department officials have estimated that the higher loan rates would increase consumer prices of food by 10 to 20 per cent though some farmer leaders have disputed the figures. (Details on page 20.)

Mutual Splits With Radio Broadcasters

'Position Adverse To Our Interests,' System Says; WOR, WFBR, WGN Resign

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, May 13.—The Mutual Broadcasting System, in disagreement with two other major radio networks over the ASCAP music war and the Government's antimonopoly policy, broke off relations today with the National Association of Broadcasters, in convention here.

At the same time, three principal stockholders of Mutual withdrew their membership from the association. They are Bamberger Broadcasting Service, Inc., (WOR), Newark, N. J.; WGN, Inc., Chicago, and the Don Lee Broadcasting System of Hollywood.

A fourth station, WFBR, Baltimore, which is to become a Mutual member October 1, later announced it had followed suit.

Both WOR and WGN are 50,000 watt stations. The Don Lee system comprises several stations on the West Coast but it was said the resignation from NAB did not necessarily affect all of them.

Although rumored behind the scenes, the action came suddenly and threw the convention into temporary confusion just as it was adjourning for the day.

Senate Probe Asked

A few minutes before the National Association of Independent Network Affiliates — privately owned stations using network programs—had entered the fight against the Federal Communications Commission's recent order cracking down on the networks.

In Washington, meanwhile, a Senate investigation of broadcasting rules and regulations laid down May 2 by the Communications Commission was proposed by Senator White (Republican), of Maine, in a resolution asking that the commission's order be held in abeyance until 60 days after an inquiry report had been filed.

The commission's rules, among other things, would make it necessary for the National Broadcasting Co. to dispose of one of its networks; would sharply regulate the affiliation contracts between networks and stations, and would prohibit the licensing of two stations in the same area to one network unless it can be shown that the public interest requires otherwise.

"Adverse to Our Interests"

White asked an investigation by the Senate Interstate Commerce Commitee. His resolution cited a Supreme Court opinion of March 25, 1940, to the effect that the Communications Act gave the commission no supervisory control of programs, business management or policy.

Reasons for Mutual's action in breaking of relations with the association were given in a letter to Neville Miller, president of N. A. B., from Alfred J. McCosker, president of WOR and chairman of the board of Mutual.

"It is now entirely clear that your association is no longer representative of the entire industry," McCosker declared, "and that you are taking a position in various matters adverse to our interests and in favor of those of others."

In a prepared statement, Miller said tonight:

"We naturally regret the withdrawal of any members from the N. A. B. However, we believe that the issues subtly concealed in the monopoly report represent a direct challenge to the freedom of radio, and, if not opposed, would be the first of a series of events leading to the destruction of not only the freedom of radio but also the freedom of the press and the freedom of

Party Chiefs Are Convened By Fuehrer, Pledge Fealty

By the United Press

Berlin, May 13.—Adolf Hitler today took over direct leadership of the Nazi Party, abandoned by Rudolf Hess when he fled by plane to Britain, and summoned party leaders into secret conference at which he may have explained the alleged "insane illusions" of Germany's No. 3 leader.

Nazi Party headquarters issued a statement saying that Hess, in his upset mental state, suffered from a belief that he could bring about "an understanding between Germany and England" and prevent "the complete destruction of the British Empire."

Anticipating that Hess may open up and talk to British leaders, a spokesman said that "we shall not recognize any utterances Hess may make in England."

A Whispering Sensation

At the secret meeting of Nazi party leaders and Gauleiters summoned by Hitler, it was announced, Reichsmarshal Goering—he and Hitler alone outranked Hess in the Nazi hierarchy—was present to hear Hitler's undivulged speech.

"The party leaders received the Fuehrer with a demonstration of their overwhelming resolution and will to victory," the official D. N. B. agency reported.

The "case of Rudolf Hess," as the newspapers called it, was the whispering sensation tonight in Berlin where the news of Hess' landing in Scotland was revealed only at mid-afternoon.

"Not 100 Per Cent Insane"

Official quarters made no attempt to disguise the fact that the case was having a great effect in official circles and invited "all and any kind of questions" in a "desire to clear up the case."

A spokesman was asked if it was not strange that a totalitarian state would permit a "crazy man" to hold a high position for so many years.

He replied that Hess "could not be considered 100 per cent insane" and that he had been an able man except for severe pains due to wounds suffered 23 or 24 years ago in the World War, leading to "insane illusions."

When Hess was scheduled to speak at Munich recently, it was asserted, these pains were so bad that he was unable to go to the radio station.

The German people, and Hess' own family, learned only this afternoon that he had fled to Britain when the 2 p. m. newscast of the German radio carried the party

Tank-Supported Troops Are Hurled Back to Salum Area

By the Associated Press

Cairo, May 13.—Five Axis columns with 200 vehicles including tanks have been hurled back to the Salum sector on the Egyptian border after penetrating 40 miles into Egypt, British general headquarters announced tonight.

The Germans and Italians were met at Sofafi, 40 miles from the Libyan frontier and 20 miles from the coast.

Two columns with 40 vehicles each advanced along the coastal route, while the other three approached along the escarpment further inland, the British said.

By evening they were back in the Salum region from which they had started operations, said the British, who regarded the advance as a scouting "in force" to measure British resistance in the torrid desert.

Reich Proclaims Area Roosevelt Recently Opened As Danger Zone

By George Bookman
Post Staff Writer

Germany formally warned last night that the Red Sea, recently declared safe for American ships by President Roosevelt, is a war zone dangerous for all shipping, but the United States Maritime Commission immediately said:

"We will pay no attention to what Germany says."

Maritime Commissioner John J. Dempsey appeared to summarize official Washington's reaction to the Berlin announcement by saying:

"The President of the United States determines the war zones as far as we are concerned, not Hitler. That's what we will abide by. We will pay no attention to what Germany says. We will do what the President of the United States says."

Bearing out this statement was an announcement at New York that intercoastal ship operators had assured Maritime Commission officials they would turn over about 20 ships to the Government within 30 days and 20 more by mid-July to rush supplies to Egypt through the Red Sea.

Regular Service Planned

President Roosevelt recently proclaimed the Red Sea open to American shipping and last week the Maritime Commission announced that regular cargo service would be instituted to that area, which is the southern doorway to the Suez Canal.

Dempsey's reaction to Berlin's extension of the war zone made it plain that there is unlikely to be any change in the plans to institute service to the Red Sea.

Asked point blank whether there were any United States ships now in the Red Sea, Dempsey, formerly a member of Congress from New Mexico, hesitated a moment and then replied:

"Let's not go into that."

Germany's warning, announced at Berlin, declared that war operations by German fleet units can be expected in the Red Sea and said every ship operating there is risking destruction.

Every ship entering this operations area risks destruction by mines or other implements of war, it was stated officially.

The United States was not mentioned in the announcement.

The area declared to be a danger zone includes the northern part of the Red Sea, the Gulfs of Suez and Aqaba, and goes as far south as the Tropic of Cancer, 450 miles below the Suez Canal.

Territorial waters of Saudi Arabia were excluded from the area outlined.

The text of the communique:

"As a result of the development of war in the Eastern Mediterranean, war actions of German armed forces may also be expected in the Red Sea in the future.

"Every ship which travels these waters, which have become an operations area, exposes itself to destruction by mines or other weapons of war.

"The German government therefore urgently warns against travel in the endangered area, which is bounded as follows:

"The northern part of the Red Sea including the Gulf of Suez and the

Darlan Sees Petain After Marshal Talks With U. S. Ambassador

By the Associated Press

Vichy, May 13.—The French cabinet will meet at 11 a. m. Wednesday to discuss terms brought back from Germany by Vice Premier Darlan. It was announced late tonight after Darlan had hastened home from a significant conference with Adolf Hitler on the whole subject of German-French collaboration.

Darlan conferred at length with Marshal Petain, but the greatest secrecy surrounded their discussion of what French sources called the "delicate" negotiations with the Germans.

Darlan arrived in Vichy only an hour and a half after United States Ambassador Leahy had discussed with Petain for 50 minutes the implications of Darlan's visit to Hitler.

Informed circles here suggested that Darlan's talks in Germany with Hitler and Nazi Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop had gone beyond a mere technical character and explored the whole question of collaboration.

There was a difference of opinion, however, as to whether the

Captive Reported To Be Revealing True Conditions Inside Germany

By the Associated Press

London (Wednesday), May 14.—Rudolf Hess shortly will be faced by Prime Minister Churchill himself in a private interview affording him the chance to tell the story of his flight from Germany and to give up vital secrets that might conceivably affect the future course of war, it was disclosed today.

Whether Hitler's long-time friend and deputy will describe the real inside story of Germany to the veteran journalist, Churchill, was a matter of speculation.

But highly placed Britons already were declaring that the beetle-browed German's almost incredible flight to Britain had given this country more military advantage "than a major victory on the battlefield."

"Maggot Is in the Apple"

The effect on German morale of his flight alone was worth that much, they said, and Churchill himself was quick to seize upon this point when he declared on learning of Hess' arrival:

"The maggot is in the apple."

When and where the prime minister and the surrendered prisoner of war will meet was not disclosed, but the London Daily Mail said Hess already had been moved from a Glasgow hospital to "a place nearer London."

And already, it said, while Hess recovers from a broken ankle bone suffered in his parachute descent to a Scottish moor, British officials are talking to him.

Indicated Disgust

Hess has described to these questioners real conditions in Germany and amid the Nazi hierarchy, the paper said, adding:

"He spoke freely and frankly and is said to have indicated his personal disgust with the Nazi party and its policy. The tension between party leaders appears to have reached a state of considerable acuteness in recent weeks."

The Daily Herald warned against overestimating the effects in Germany of Hess' flight, saying "there is no reason to think of Hess as the leader of any widespread revolt against the Fuehrer."

Authoritative British sources declared, however, that the desertion of the No. 3 Nazi was concrete evidence that Hess "and others in the inner councils of the Nazis" had decided Germany could not beat a Britain backed by full United States aid.

Members of Commons speculated even that Hess quarreled with other Nazis because he already knew that Hitler had abandoned his plan for invasion of England.

"Hess would not have come to Britain if he believed Hitler had a chance to stage a successful invasion of England in the near future," reliable informants said. "For he'd then be in the power of those with whom he so elegantly has fallen out."

In Parliament lobbies, there were suggestions that Hess might be persuaded to broadcast to Germany and the German-occupied countries, to give them a picture of what is going on in Hitler's inside councils.

(The British short-wave radio already was spreading the news of his desertion far and wide. Today it quoted this Cairo comment: "The

'White House Must Be Respected'

The Army stepped in last night to protect the White House peace pickets when bands of servicemen made several threats to smash the line that has been marching continuously since Friday afternoon.

Lieut. Col. Horace B. Smith, White House military aide and adjutant of the Washington Provisional District, twice broke up large crowds of soldiers, sailors and marines who converged at Lafayette Park, facing the Executive Mansion. He arrested one unidentified soldier who heckled him.

The Army officer, who told reporters he had been ordered to the White House for the purpose, snapped the servicemen into attention and told them:

"You men like myself are wearing the uniform of the United States, and when you do that you've got to be orderly."

When one of the soldiers suggested that they might come back in civilian clothes, Smith warned: "In uniform or out, the White House must be respected."

Twice more bands mobilized at Lafayette Park, only to be ordered off by Lieut. Col. Smith.

Later Marine officers appeared and joined Metropolitan, Park and White House police in patrolling the area.

The six American Peace Mobilization pickets, three girls and three young men, grimly continued their rotating vigil, demanding a ban on convoys

Earlier in the evening, a score of police, quietly ordered to the scene, arrived in time to prevent a repetition of the Monday night melee, when servicemen rushed the pickets and injured one. A soldier was arrested then and charged with assault.

Inspector Edward Kelly, of the Washington police, went about lecturing the protesting servicemen. "Just let them (the pickets) wear out their shoeleather," he urged.

The arrival of Lieut. Col. Smith apparently was a result of Maj. Gen. Edwin M. Watson's promise to an American Peace Mobilization delegation yesterday afternoon that the "perpetual peace vigil" would be given adequate protection against further harassment by servicemen. Gen. Watson is the President's secretary and military aide.

The Peace Mobilization announced it was setting up a soup kitchen at its headquarters at 1653 Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest, "in anticipating a long future for the vigil."

Jury Trying Burko Locked Up After 13 Hours' Deliberation

After nearly 13 hours of deliberation, one woman and 11 men jurors trying former Police Court Clerk Joseph R. Burko on a charge of conspiracy to steal fines were locked up last night by order of Justice F. Dickinson Letts of the District Court.

The jurors, who received the case at 10:49 a. m. yesterday, will resume their deliberations early today. They were locked up at 11:29 p. m. at the Continental Hotel.

Burko has been on trial since last Wednesday. He denied the charges and claimed District Attorney Edward M. Curran (a former police judge) plotted against him with Police Judge Walter J. Casey.

The jurors twice returned to the courtroom. The first time they asked Justice Letts for documents on which Burko was alleged to have made fraudulent entries. The second time they listened attentively to a definition of conspiracy for which they asked the justice.

James Edward Sullivan, former bailiff, who was indicted with Burko, pleaded guilty and testified against Burko, waited all day and all evening in the courtroom for the verdict.

Hess Tells Captors of Flying Straight to Scotland by Map

By the Associated Press

Glasgow, May 13.—Rudolf Hess told his captors how he secretly fitted an extra gasoline tank to a warplane and flew a bee-line from Augsburg, Germany, to Scotland with the route marked in blue pencil on the map.

The story of the Nazi chief deputy's coldly calculated flight from Adolf Hitler was related today by two home guardsmen who took over Hess' custody late Saturday night after Hess parachuted onto a Scottish field with an impact felt 'round the world.

On him they found the map with the blue-penciled Augsburg-to-Scotland route, and a quantity of compressed food.

The extra gasoline tank, fitted to the Messerschmitt 110 so that Hess could be certain he would have enough gasoline for the trip, was dropped in the sea as he crossed the Scottish coast, Hess related.

The home guardsmen, Jack Paterson and Robert Gibson, related also Hess' story of how he tried to land the plane—the first Messerschmitt he ever had flown.

"I circled over the spot where I finally parachuted for a long time,"

Treat Hess With Caution, Authority Here Advises British

He'd Be Best Trojan Horse, Says Traveler

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

As host to Rudolf Hess, No. 3 man in the Nazi hierarchy, Great Britain would do well to have the "gravest suspicion" of a Trojan horse ruse, in the opinion of a man here who is in authority on the Nazis.

This man spent many years in Germany. He saw Hitler, Goering, Hess & Co. rise to power, and he saw them plunge Europe into war. For very good reasons, his identity cannot be disclosed.

He conceded that Hess may have become involved in a palace feud and that he may have fled from a combination of "wild men" like Himmler, Von Ribbentrop and Goering.

But a more likely theory, he told The Washington Post, was that Hess had risked his life for his Fuehrer and his country in a ruse of some kind which, in Nazi eyes, would be a masterpiece among stratagems.

His Hands Are Cleanest

A moderate in the Nazi Party, a man who remained in the background during the 1934 blood purge, Hess, The Post's informant said, was the only prominent Nazi who could be used in a rojan horse trick.

"No Nazi leader could arrive on British soil with cleaner hands than Hess," he said. "Goering has spilled too much blood. Von Ribbentrop, a former ambassador to Britain, would be assassinated. Himmler and Goebbels are fiends.

"Hess is the only one in the Nazi hierarchy who could have gone to England on a great ruse.

"Hess has had a sheltered position in the Nazi Party. His relations with Hitler have been smooth, and easy-going. He has not been subject to much strain in Germany, either on national or international affairs. The question of insanity is out.

"Loyalty to party is emphasized more than any one thing in Germany, and Hitler himself practices that principle in his relations with his colleagues. Therefore, a defection by Hess—who has had so little to do with national or international affairs—must be viewed with the greatest suspicion.

Will to Sacrifice

"Hess is the kind of person who would be impressed with the opportunity of making the supreme sacrifice for his friend, Adolf Hitler, and for the good of the cause. He has the temperament and, I believe, the inclination to make the sacrifice.

"And if it were necessary, in perfecting some plan involving an action of this sort, the choice could only fall on Hess. No other person, as I have said, exists in the Nazi top ranks who could have undertaken the job.

"Therefore, the British must watch their step. They must take no action in the direction of relaxing their precautions, or changing any policy, or letting down in the least. To do so might cost them their heads."

Nothing in Hess' character or history would indicate that he is the type to play the role of traitor, the authority said. Moreover, he said, if the Nazis should lose the war—and a revolution should ensue in Germany—Hess' record might save him from public fury.

Man of Moderate Ways

Nevertheless, he conceded that Hess might have kicked over the traces and fled for his life. He described Hess as fundamentally a man of moderate ways, intellectually not a great deal advanced, and utterly lacking in dynamism.

"Having achieved a very high position and being constantly in touch with Hitler," he said, "it is not impossible that from time to time he has taken stands on national and international policy that may have embroiled him in a palace feud.

"It is possible that he may have provoked the hatred of the wild men of the party, for instance, a combination of Himmler, Ribbentrop and Goebbels. And there may have been indications to him that his prestige and position were being fatally undermined, so that he saw the handwriting on the wall.

"I'm pretty well convinced that one or the other of these suppositions has pushed Hess to this violent deed, for which no normal basis exists in his character.

Danger in the Palace

"It's inconceivable that out of his own heart and thinking he could have aroused his dormant individuality to such an extent as to make the supreme sacrifice which this act has indicated; namely, staking his existence, in the face of present German successes, on an English victory—and sacrifice of his wife and child.

"The danger to Hess in the palace might be more real had he been indicated as Hitler's first choice and ahead of Goering, whose machinations he might have had cause to fear.

"But since Goering, by Hitler's choice and by his own popular standing in Germany, was the Fuehrer's No. 1 successor, a crisis which Hess might have feared in the realm of home politics was far from being actual. In fact, the issue wouldn't arise until after Goering assumed office as supreme leader of Germany."

The authority's insistence that Hess was an outstanding moderate among the Nazis, and not the kind of person to be "mentally deranged," is borne out by William D. Bayles in his "Caesars in Goose Step." Describing Hess, the author says:

"He is remarkable because he looks and acts normal. Surrounded by eccentricity, oddity and abnormality, his presence in the Nazi hierarchy is as unreal as would be that of a common household tomato painted into a background of cubistic impressionism . . . " first rat to leave the ship.")

The House of Commons, meeting in temporary quarters because of the destruction wrought to its chamber by Saturday night's raid, heard from Prime Minister Churchill that he had worked on the case personally most of last night.

He deferred a detailed statement, but he remarked:

". . . This is one of those cases in which the imagination is somewhat baffled by the facts as they present themselves."

The House, in high humor, roared with laughter.

Churchill did not reply to one member's demand that he "bear in mind this gentleman's record of devotion to the vile genius of Europe."

Peace Plan Denied

Officials understandably were loath to divulge what specific military advantage Britain might gain from the 800-mile flight of Hess to Scotland, although there was one report he had brought definite and vital information concerning Germany's air force.

Authorized statements stressed that Hess had no specific message, that he carried no peace plan, and that his desertion was dictated by purely personal motives.

But they did say that Hess had quarreled with "others in the Nazi gang" and that his flight showed clearly "the core of Germany is rotten."

Some conclusions were made available to the press on the basis of an interview which Ivone Kirkpatrick, former counselor of the British Embassy in Berlin, had with Hess in Scotland. Kirkpatrick, while in Berlin, was a close acquaintance of the deputy fuehrer.

Sane and Healthy

This material made these points:

Hess is sane and healthy, except for a leg injury.

He is being treated as a prisoner of war at a secret place of confinement. No reporters may see him.

He brought no especial message to Britain, no "peace plan."

If his flight was a trick, "it was a very, very strange one."

He flew to Britain in uniform, and, as far as is known, alone, a distance of about 800 miles. Apparently he bailed out when he ran out of gasoline. Officials presumed he flew to Scotland because there would be less air activity there.

As to why he chose Britain rather than one of the few remaining neutral countries, a spokesman said "it is supposed he knew that in any neutral country he would be in imminent danger of being bumped off by the Nazis."

Alfred Duff Cooper, the minister of information, whose job it now is to make the most effective possible propaganda use of the Hess affair, told a luncheon:

"I can only say that his arrival here shows the first breach in the Nazi Party that has occurred since Hitler murdered a huge bloc of his own followers on June 30, 1934."

He referred to the blood purge.

Whatever Hess' qualities, Duff Cooper went on, "his rather unexpected arrival in this country as a guest is by no means unwelcome."

Lord Beaverbrook's Evening Standard:

"Millions of Germans were deluded enough to regard the Fuehrer as the great regenerator of a new and noble Germany . . . the terrible myth is stripped bare. The awful legend is killed . . . it has been stabbed by its first disciple."

Hard to Explain

The Daily Sketch:

"Has there been some bitter quarrel between him (Hess) and Hitler? Are Nazi leaders falling out and did Hess have to fly for his life?"

Other sources contended that the Hess flight would be impossible to explain to the German people and that the Nazi story he was insane would not be believed.

"Crazy men don't fly planes 800 miles," they said.

It was recalled that he had made one of the principal speeches at the Hitler birthday celebration April 20.

Again and again, the press hammered away at the point that Hess always had been considered the embodiment of Nazi faith in the Fuehrer.

"He was," said the Standard, "in one sense the original Nazi."

In indirect reply to German statements that Hess' health had failed until his mind gave way, the Glasgow physician who examined him found merely that he was carrying a stimulant "which he said he was in the habit of carrying when making flights, in case he had heart trouble or had to make a parachute landing."

Absorbed in Writing

London, May 13 (INS).—The London Daily Mirror said tonight Rudolf Hess is in a military hospital "somewhere in England," where he spent as much time as possible writing.

"Writing seems to have developed into a compelling passion, judging from his absorption and the deliberation with which he writes," said the Mirror, "it may well be that he is woring on a most important historical document. Officials do not indicate the nature of his writing, however."

statement of "explanation" which also was published by German newspapers.

The Deputy Fuehrer's wife, nee Ilse Proehl, daughter of a Hanover physician, and their 3½-year-old son, reportedly were at Hess small estate near Obersalzburg, with Hess' mother.

No Effect on War Party

It was asserted emphatically that Hess' fantastic flight would have no effect on Germany's prosecution of the war "which will be waged until British rulers either are overthrown or prepared to make peace."

Authorized spokesmen said:

"We know that British rulers will make every crude misuse of this situation."

Referring to a British communique that Hess was held incommunicado, the spokesmen said:

"Who knows by what ugly means some sort of confession may be extracted from him? We cannot even know if he actually makes any statements which may be credited to him."

The Nazi Party "explanation" pointed out that "as is welll known in the party, Rudolf Hess, who had undergone physical suffering for years, recently had been seeking refuge in various forms of aid, magicians, astrologists, etc.," and added, "the extent to which these persons bear guilt in leading him to the mental confusion which caused the present step presently is being investigated.

Trap Suspected

"It also is possible that Hess was enticed into a trap by English quarters.

"He, better than anyone else, was acquainted with the peace proposals which came from the bottom of the Fuehrer's heart. He apparently came to live in the illusion that by personal sacrifice he might prevent developments which in his eyes could end only with the complete destruction of the British Empire.

"The National Socialist Party regrets that this idealist fell victim to such a fateful mental illusion."

The flight of Hess overshadowed everything else, but the press handled the matter conservatively. Although the brief party announcement was carried, editorials did not mention Hess, but concentrated on German military successes and in attacking "plutocrats and Jews" of Britain and the United States.

No Word of Adjutants

Spokesmen sought to minimize the importance of Hess' flight and his place as third man in the Nazi hierarchy. They said he had not "really" been Deputy Fuehrer since the war started and had been steadily relieved of "one responsibility after another."

Spokesmen refused information on the arrest of Hess' adjutants, ordered by Hitler because they "permitted him to fly against orders."

"If the adjutants can prove they were unaware of Hitler's order they probably will be freed," an informant said.

They also refused information on letters Hess was said to have written before he left Germany because they were "written by a man a long time ill and affected mentally." They would not disclose even the identity of the addressee.

Although insisting and reiterating that Hess was a "tragic case of mental illusion," Nazi spokesmen said he was not under any "illusion" that he was "being pursued by the Gestapo or anyone else."

Throughout Germany Hess had enjoyed a reputation for incorruptibility, firmness and idealism.

Macduff Hess—Fare Thee Well. I Would Not Be the Villain

(The fantastic flight of Rudolf Hess to Scotland had people the world over talking to themselves last night—and certain authoritative British quarters quoting Shakespeare, in whose Macbeth they saw an analogy.)

By William Shakespeare
(As Edited By the British Press Service)

London, May 13 (INS).—From Macbeth. Act IV, Scene 1:

Lennox (Heinrich Himmler, chief of the German Gestapo): 'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word, MacDuff (Hess) has fled to England.

Macbeth (Hitler): Fled to England!

Lennox (Himmler): Aye, my good lord.

MacBeth (Hitler): Time, thou anticap'st my dread exploits; the flightly purpose never is o'ertook unless the deed go with it: from this moment the very firstlings of my heart shall be the firstlings of my hand. And even now, to crown my thoughts with acts, be it thought and done: the castle of MacDuff (Hess) I will surprise; seize upon fife; give to the edge of the sword his wife, his babes, and all unfortunate souls that trace him in this line . . .

From Act IV, Scene II

Lady MacDuff (Frau Hess): What had he done, to make him fly the land?

Ross (Goebbels): You must have patience, Madam.

Lady MacDuff (Frau Hess): He had none; his flight was madness: When our actions do not, our fears make us traitors.

Ross (Goebbels): You know not whether it was his wisdom or his fear.

Lady MacDuff (Frau Hess): Wisdom! To leave his wife, to leave his babes, his mansion, and his titles, in a place from whence himself does fly. He loves us not . . . All is the fear, and nothing is the love; as little is the wisdom, where the flight runs against all reason.

Act IV—Scene III

MacDuff (Hess, a prisoner of war in Britain): Fare thee well. Lord: I would not be the villain that thou think'st for the whole space that's in the tyrant grasp and the rich east to boot.

Hess Quarreled With Hitler Over Personal Matter, Ex-Envoy Wilson Feels

Friendship Held Too Deep For Principle

Hugh R. Wilson, the last American Ambassador to Germany, declared last night that in his opinion Rudolf Hess fled Germany because he foresaw another "blood purge" that would mean his death.

In a telephone interview with The Post from his home in New York, Wilson said:

"I knew Hess when I was Ambassador in Germany. He was a very healthy man and appeared to be entirely well balanced.

"To my mind, the most obvious explanation is the most probable. Hess saw the ground getting shaky under him and departed—in a hurry."

Wilson advanced the belief that Hess quarreled with Hitler not over major military or international policy, but over some personal issue.

Doubts Issue Was Russia

The envoy, who was recalled from Germany in November, 1939, after the violent pogroms there, scouted theories that Hess quarreled with his Fuehrer over collaboration with Russia.

"I can't imagine that that would be a deep enough issue to separate the two men, who were such intimate friends," said Wilson.

"Hess must have quarreled with Hitler over some personal matter and then feared that he would become the victim of another blood purge, such as the one he witnessed in 1934," commented Wilson.

It was pointed out that Great Britain was the closest refuge where Hess would have some assurance that his life would be safe. Because of Hitler's conquest, all continental Europe, even the states still neutral, would be dangerous for him. Only inside the British island fortress would he be safe from Nazi assassins.

Wallace Quotes "Mein Kampf"

Vice President Wallace also took a hand in official efforts to make sense out of Hess' action.

Wallace reminded reporters that the third ranking Nazi leader was reputed to have collaborated with Hitler in writing some passages of "Mein Kampf."

The Vice President then showed newspapermen an excerpt from the book (written in 1924) and said he wondered whether Hess might have written the lines and whether they represented his present view of the war. The excerpt follows:

"The British nation can be counted upon to carry through to victory any struggle that it once enters upon, no matter how long such a struggle may last or however great the sacrifices that may be necessary or whatever the means that have to be employed; and all this even though the actual military equipment at hand may be utterly inadequate when compared with that of other nations."

'Daddy Roosevelt Missed Bus,' Nazi Labor Chief Writes

Berlin, May 13 (AP).—Dr. Robert Ley, leader of the German labor front, advised "Poor Daddy Roosevelt" today that "he missed the bus" and that, at the latest, in three years the part of Europe ruled by Germany would be working full blast for the Reich.

"Then 300,000,000 Europeans of our continent, with the powerful, inexhaustible resources of their economy and work, will face 130,000,000 Americans in the United States and 40,000,000 Englishmen in ruined and defeated England," Ley said in an article in the newspaper, Der Angriff.

"Then we will see whether the Anglo-Saxons will overcome the lead of the Germans."

some losses," the report said.

Successes also were described in the Ethiopian theater, where 200 more Italians were said to have been captured as imperial forces continued their closing-in tactics against the fortress of Amba Alaji, where 38,000 Italians are making a final stand. Fighting there was going on in steaming terrain drenched by summer rains, the British said.

Axis forces stalled in repeated attempts to break through the defenses of the besieged port of Tobruk in Libya, apparently waited for a let-up in the burning heat before taking another crack at the British fortifications. The British said "there was no change in the situation" as the siege passed its fifth week.

Reliable sources here reported that Iraq was taking advantage of a Turkish offer to mediate the guerilla warfare between the British and Iraqis. Egypt had offered to act as mediator, these sources said, but Iraq replied that Turkey's offer had been received first. The British communique made no mention of fighting in Iraq.

he said, "but in the darkness I could not see a suitable landing place.

"Then I climbed several thousand feet, threw the plane over on its back and switched off the engine. Just as I was falling out I righted the machine again, switched on the engine and sent the plane hurtling to earth while I fell clear."

He said nothing about the ten bullet holes found in the tail of the wrecked plane—indicating he either was fired upon by German pursuers or caught in the gunsights of British fighters. No such action by British pilots has been reported.

Paterson said Hess was completely calm when he talked to him; that he seemed more impressed by the availability of a drink of milk than by his own achievement, and that he gave his drinking cup to his guards as a souvenir.

The sturdy Scottish farmer, who first approached Hess with a pitchfork, and the home guards to whom the farmer delivered him agreed that their remarkable prisoner was a polite, self-possessed fellow, and that they knew he must be important even though they did not at the time learn he was the No. 3 Nazi, making good on an escape outrivaling penny-dreadful fiction.

Farmer David McLean, in whose field Hess landed by parachute, helped the Nazi leader into his house—since Hess limped from a broken bone in his left ankle—and offered him tea.

Hess refused, but chatted amiably and accepted a glass of water.

After a time, McLean took him to a nearby airport and turned him over to Gibson and Paterson.

"I have no bombs in my plane, so you need not worry," he told Gibson, speaking excellent English. The plane was a pursuit type and already had crashed, but this somewhat cryptic remark was not elaborated.

While Hess talked, Paterson said, "we offered him cigarettes, but he told us he didn't smoke. So when we asked him if he wanted a glass of milk, he said, 'Have you got milk?' as if surprised that we had any.

"He drank half a glass, and then remarked: 'I feel a bit cramped. My legs are stiff from being in the plane so long, and my ankle is a bit painful.'

"He said: 'I've been in the air for four hours. I left Germany in a Messerschmitt 110 destroyer. Although I'm a skilled pilot, I am really a German army officer.'"

That he is indeed a skilled pilot was suggested by a statement from informed British sources which said Hess was understandably tired "due to having carried out a remarkable flight of nearly 900 miles and bailing out, which experience he never had before, nor had he ever before flown a Messerschmitt 110.

"That flight obviously entailed a high degree of physical and moral courage."

But Hess did not discuss such matters with the farmer and the home guards, even though he conversed freely.

"He appeared to be a little excited, but was perfectly sane," said Paterson. "He was immaculately dressed. His uniform was made of the finest material and he wore very fine leather top boots.

"He had a very expensive camera strung around his neck, but he told us he hadn't taken any photographs. He also wore a magnificent bracelet watch."

Farmer McLean, too, was impressed by the watch, saying, "His watch and identity bracelet were of gold."

In both cases Hess' first act was to convince his captors he was not armed, smilingly inviting their search.

Still ignorant of Hess' identity, the home guards carted him off to a hospital, relating, "he thanked us for our kindness. We were surprised today when we learned our prisoner was Rudolf Hess, but we felt certain he was somebody high in the Nazi ranks."

Hess first was taken to a Glasgow hospital, but as a precaution was moved later to a hospital in the country. A doctor who examined him said he appeared all right and said he had with him a stimulant for use in case of a heart attack or a parachute jump. The nature of this stimulant was not disclosed.

Reliable British sources said "he appeared to be a little tired, and gave the impression to Kirkpatrick (Ivone Kirkpatrick, of the foreign office, who interviewed him) that recently he had not ben getting outdoor exercise to which he is accustomed, but had been working in an office.

"Aside from this tiredness, he is comfortable and in very good spirits.

"He is in bed in a hospital, where he has been equipped with army pajamas. Except for a slight pain in his ankle, he appears quite well. There is an officer looking after him.

"He is spending most of the time resting, dozing and reading periodicals and writing."

What Hess is writing was not disclosed.

Hess Fled Because He Has Lost Confidence Hitler Can Win War, Ex-Nazi Leader Says

By the Associated Press

Montreal, May 13.—Otto Strasser, former Nazi Party leader who knew Rudolf Hess for 20 years, said tonight in an interview that he believed Hess fled to England because "he has lost confidence that Hitler can win the war."

"I always thought Hess would commit suicide with Hitler at the last moment," he said. "Actually, I am very astonished at his escape.

"He was so devoted to Hitler that I thought he would be with him to the end—in fact would hand him the knife. I cannot believe that he is now against Hitler. I am sure though he has lost confidence that Hitler can win the war."

In other remarks contained in a copyrighted story in the Montreal Herald, Strasser said Hess' flight confirmed his belief that "within the national fabric of Germany there is a dry-rot at work that will bring the whole Nazi system to destruction."

"Understand, please," Strasser wrote, "that I know Hitler, Hess, Himmler, Goering and Goebbels better than any leader of the democratic nations now at war with them can know them. . . .

"Hitler I already have denounced as a reactionary to his face. Hess I know as the most trusted of the Fuehrer's lieutenants; Goering I know as a man of consuming ambition, a rich industrialist, a friend and trusted adviser of the Prussian army system, a man who has been named Hitler's No. 1 successor because he is Hitler's No. 1 threat.

"Hitler has always feared a coalition of the German army and Goering.

"The Nazi party is full of jealousies. Yet Rudolf Hess was a quiet, efficient and modest man who accomplished his work with the least amount of self-advertisement. He was always in the background, yet ever to the fore. Perhaps, in his own queer, twisted way, Hitler looked upon Hess as the only real friend he had in the higher councils of the Nazis.

"When I heard of Hess' sudden and astonishing flight I knew it must have taken a great internal convulsion, an event of the greatest significance to the whole conduct of the war and the eventual future of the Nazi party to make him take this desperate and dramatic way out.

"Here appears at last the fissure that indicates the crumbling facade of the Nazi hierarchy."

Strasser, recalling that the Prussian army "never had any use for the Nazis," asserted that Hess' flight indicated a trial of strength was at hand between Hitler, Hess and Himmler on the one hand, and Goering and the army on the other.

"Hess, knowing full well that his life was not worth a pfennig, escaped before the ax fell."

"The fact that the army, so far, has been mainly successful makes me think that an attempt will soon be made to overthrow the whole Nazi system and substitute for that a system of Prussian control. When and if that occurs, both Goebbels and Himmler will be shot dead within the hour by Goering.

". . . . Hitler faces another crossroads in his life, worse and more terrible in its implications than on June 21, 1934 (start of the purge in which Hitler's long-time friend Ernst Roehm lost his life).

"He made his choice then—it was to go with the army, with the industrialist and with power. To that end, and for that end alone, he sacrifices his friends and helpers."

negotiations were at an end, with Darlan putting the decision up to Petain for a flat yes or no, or whether they still were in progress, with Darlan returning merely to report to his elderly chief. It was noted that Dalan was smiling when his special train rolled in.

Informed persons expressed the belief that one important point discussed was shifting of the demarcation line between occupied and unoccupied France.

Meanwhile, it was announced that the German agreement to liberalize passage of freight and securities across the line probably would be effective before June 1 and that there would be practically no restrictions on movement of freight or French securities and currency, although foreign securities and money would be forbidden passage.

Meanwhile, it was announced that Admiral Darlan had taken charge of French refugee and concentration camps after "inadequate results" from efforts to better their condition under the national police.

A general camp office was created "to survey and command the camps." A principal aim was said to be "definite improvement of living conditions of internees. The new measures do not affect foreign labor camps and foreign soldier camps, which are under the war department.

'Putzi's' Son Sees Nazi Rift In Hess' Flight

By the Associated Press

Montgomery, Ala., May 13.—Rudolf Hess' flight from Germany was viewed today as "the criterion of ruptures" in the Nazi hierarchy by Egon Hanfstaengl, whose father, Ernst (Putzi) Hanfstaengl, once headed Hitler's foreign press office.

"Whenever anybody leaves Germany the Nazis always declare him to be insane—always accuse anyone disagreeing with them as having 'hallucinations,'" said the 20-year-old Egon, now a private in the United States Air Corps at Gunter Field here.

"They said the same thing about my father when he disagreed, discovered a plot against himself and fled to England on his fiftieth birthday, February 11, 1937, and I guess the same was true of Otto Strasser (who broke with Hitler and fled in 1931)," he continued.

The elder Hanfstaengl, formerly in business in New York, now is in a Canadian concentration camp, having been taken into custody in London at the outbreak of the war because of his former high standing in the Nazi government.

While seeing in the incident "the criterion of ruptures" and saying he did not think it was done "with instructions," young Hanfstaengl said:

"I cannot, of course, on this basis, prophesy the downfall of Nazilism, because no one thought Red Russia would last five years and look how it has gone on, despite all its corruption and cruelty."

"It looks like the strain is getting them (the Nazi leaders) down," he continued, "and it looks like maybe things were going up in smoke—at least there's an indication."

"I'm really not qualified to judge Hess," Egon added, "because I never knew him as well as I did Goering, Goebbels and Hitler, although he came to our home at Munich about as much as the rest, and I used to tease him about his bushy eyebrows and he me about my being fat."

Try Hess, Editors Urge in Cable

New York, May 13 (AP).—Trial of Rudolf Hess before an international court with 16 exiled governments represented was urged today in a cable sent to Herbert Morrison, British minister of home security, by Victor Riesel, managing editor of the New Leader magazine, and Gerhart H. Seger, editor of the Neue Volkszeitung and a former member of the German Reichstag.

Riesel and Seger said they believed that "Hess is the first missile of poison gas fired to England by Hitler to start public discussion of peace possibilities counting on a split within the Nazi Party."

Davis Suggests Plan to Avert Defense Strikes

William H. Davis, vice chairman of the National Defense Mediation Board, yesterday suggested to a Senate Labor subcommittee that the Government should place its defense orders with firms having bargaining contracts with their employes.

Davis argued that satisfactory labor relations were as important to the fulfillment of orders as the company's finances, capacity and tools.

The suggestion arose duringDavis' testimony on legislation proposed by Senator Ball (Republican), of Minnesota, calling for a mandatory cooling off period before strikes could be declared.

Opposes Injunctions

Although he opposed the bill because of its compulsory features, Davis said he favored a 30-day waiting period provided it was reached voluntarily by agreement between management and union. He implied that the Government would experience less strike difficulty if it placed orders with firms which had negotiated labor contracts into which the 30-day cooling off period was written.

He also opposed the labor injunction proposed as an enforcement method in the Ball bill.

"History shows that the labor injunction only messes things up," he declared.

Certiorari Power Asked

Davis also recommended that the Mediation Board have a sort of "certiorari" power under which it could decide whether or not to take the cases certified to it, and that all mediation agencies in the Government except the board, the United States Conciliation Service and the National Mediation Board (which considers railroad workers' disputes) be abolished.

Explaining that the board had no choice, under the executive order creating it, but to accept cases certified to it by the Secretary of Labor, Davis said that he believed disputes involving less than 200 or 300 workers should not occupy the board's attention unless the strike caused a key defense bottleneck. He hastily added, however, that the board had had "100 per cent cooperation" from Labor Secretary Perkins.

periors and I will abide by whatever they say."

The highest ranking officer in the Fire Department involved is Deputy Chief A. C. Buscher, 67. He had nothing to say.

A report to the Commissioners showed that 50 members of the Police Department are 60 or more and there are 46 of this age group in the Fire Department.

Lieut. McGill Grove, 71, is the oldest man in the Police Department and Private Frank Hall, 72, is the oldest fireman.

Several officers of the Police Department are 60 or more. They include Assistant Superintendent L. I. H. Edwards, 60; Inspector Maurice Collins, 62; Inspector William G. Stott, 62; Capt. Hugh H. Groves, 60; Capt. Joseph C. Morgan, 62; Capt. Joseph C. Pierson, 62, and Capt. Jeremiah Sullivan, 60.

The list also includes nine lieutenants, four sergeants, nine detective sergeants and 19 privates.

Following annual physical examinations, men in the two departments are given three classifications: A—Men who are found physically qualified in every particular; B—Men who have certain defects but not of such a character to render them unfit for further service; C—Men who are unfit for continued active patrol duty.

There have long been reports at the District Building that certain city officials are dissatisfied with many phases of police activities, but no official comment has ever been made. These rumors have not involved the Fire Department.

Lewis said he had received word from Northern operators that they would come to New York next week to discuss the situation. Noting increases of coal prices of from 30 to 35 cents a ton in the South, Lewis said the Southern operators were collecting sums which cover "every conceivable cost."

"In consequence," he concluded, "we see no reason to continue dilatory measures beyond the date suggested."

Offsetting the darkened labor picture, however, were:

5. The mediation board announced an agreement to end the 50-day strike of 2,000 members of the United Textile Workers of America (C. I. O.) at the Utica Mohawk Cotton Mills, Utica, N. Y., which halted work on a $2,000,000 Army contract for sheets. Details of the agreement were withheld pending union ratification, but informed sources said it took the form of a one-year contract between the company and union.

6. A report that following a conference here with OPM and Navy officials, representatives of the A. F. of L. Building Trades Council were prepared to terminate a strike on a $30,000,000 construction project at the Boston Navy Yard. The walkout began Monday.

7. An agreement by the C. I. O. United Auto Workers to postpone strike action against the Hudson Motor Car Co., Detroit, threatened for yesterday. The union is seeking wage increases.

8. Swift settlement of a day-old strike involving 500 to 800 A. F. of L. joiners who left their jobs yesterday at the Army's $47,000,000 ammunition loading plant and ordnance depot construction project at Ravenna, Ohio.

Nye Would Call It 'Roosevelt War'

Denver, May 13 (AP).—Senator Nye (Republican), of North Dakota, asserted tonight that if the United States now were to go to war, the conflict would be known as the Roosevelt war.

In an address for an America First Committee rally, Senator Nye said the President was up against a "very bewildering problem."

"If only there had been frankness the President might not now be up against an awful nightmare."

Baering Down On the News

By Arthur (Bugs) Baer

In my form-fitting opinion the Hess story is an encore to a hophead's dream.

Up until the time I went to press the only thing that had come out of England was rumors. And the only thing that had come out of Germany was Hess.

All the leading psychiatrists and the misleading psycho-alcoholists were busy last night trying to read the message in the stars, with the psycho-alcoholists getting no further than the big dipper.

My first guess was that Hess must be a British agent, but that's probably wilder than the hair on the back of your neck.

But don't forget that he was born in Egypt, the land of mystery and bad tobacco. Anyway, whatever Hess is, I know the story made me quiver like a rabbit's nose. I have been in the newspaper game many years, and I have seen enough stories break to know there is more moisture in a drop of perspiration than there is in all of Niagara.

England laid back and clammed up until the first story came out of Germany. Then it told where Hess was and how he got there. I still don't figure why Hess picked Scotland unless he was headed for a more hospitable iceberg and was blown off his course. If there will always be an England and England will be free, I predict that Hess will find no bargains like that in Scotland.

Smoot Strike Hearing Set For Monday

The first Natoinal Defense Mediation Board hearing on the Smoot Sand & Gravel Corporation strike yesterday was scheduled for 10 a. m. Monday as the Labor Department Conciliation Service continued settlement efforts.

A three-hour joint conference arranged by Conciliators Howard T. Colvin and Frank J. Sheehan was adjourned at 6:30 p. m. until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning. Participants were noncommittal on progress made.

The walkout, involving more than 200 sand and gravel dredgemen and other workers, began at 7 a. m. Monday to enforce union demands for wages and hours adjustments. A protracted strike would seriously interfere with national defense construction at the Navy Yard, Bolling Field, the Naval Medical Center at Bethesda, Md., and other projects, as well as considerable private work.

Taking part in yesterday's negotiations at the Labor Department, which followed all-day discussions Monday, were Roger J. Whiteford, counsel, and officials of Smoot Sand and Gravel Corporation and, for the union, F. Clark Ellis, heading a committee representing Local No. 2205, and James Watt, of the American Federation of Labor.

Efforts to terminate the walkout are being carried on independently of the Justice Department's case against the company on charges of violating the antitrust laws. L. E. Smoot, president, and other officers are defendants in the civil suit, the start of which awaits the setting of a trial date in District Court.

Should Labor conciliators effect a strike settlement before next Monday, the National Defense Mediation Board hearing scheduled for that day will be canceled, said Ralph T. Seward, executive secretary.

'I Told You So,' Says Prophesier Of Hess' Flight

Edmonton, Alberta, May 13 (INS). The fantastic flight of Deputy Fuehrer Rudolf Hess from Bavaria to Scotland in a Nazi fighter plane electrified the whole world.

It didn't even surprise Harry Snider. Why should it? He predicted it last November.

Snider, 60, Russian-born Edmonton cattle buyer, tonight quietly displayed newspaper clippings from that some time during the spring last November when he predicted of 1941 "a great man would leave Germany to go to Britain thus greatly speeding the British victory."

Tonight, Harry Snider declared that war would end with a British victory by August 31 when the Germans stage an unsuccessful invasion atempt against the British Isles.

Stanton Park Unit Holds Season's Last Meeting

The Stanton Park Citizens' Association closed its meetings for the season last night with an expression of pride in their community from members of the younger generation.

Pupils of the sixth grade of the Peabody-Hilton School discussed their efforts in keeping property beautiful by a "lawn patrol." They were presented by their teacher, Miss Elizabeth Newsome.

The pupils expressed their desire for a new playground in the area. Henry M. Stull, president of the Federation of Citizens' Associations, suggested that the children attempt to form a junior civic organization. The meeting was held at the Peabody School, Fifth and C Streets Northeast.

Navy Will Withhold News On Transfers of Personnel

The Navy yesterday discontinued the daily announcement of transfers of officers to ships and stations, declaring that such action was deemed "essential in the interests of security."

In specific instances from time to time, the announcement said, notice of change of duty of Navy and Marine Corps officers will be announced.

The action followed similar restrictions placed on disclosure of the movements of ships and of Marine Corps and Reserve units.

Earlier in the day, a Navy Department representative asked Congress for authority to apply a rigid censorship on photographs of ships, navy yards and bases, airplanes and equipment being manufactured for the Navy.

Commander James H. Foskett, of the Office of Naval Intelligence, urged the Senate Naval Affairs Committee to approve legislation fixing severe penalties for persons making such photographs without prior permission of the Secretary of the Navy.

Senator Gerry (Democrat), of Rhode Island, objected to the fact that the bill would be permanent rather than emergency legislation and the measure was referred to a subcommittee headed by him for further study.

The War Department said it had no plans to restrict the publication of transfers of officers.

Capt Confirmed

The Senate confirmed yesterday the appointment of James C. Capt of Texas, as director of the census to succeed W. L. Austin, retired.

Spain Expects Nazis to Cross To Gibraltar

By John Lloyd
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, May 13.—Observers in Spain are convinced the Germans have plans worked out to the last detail for a drive across the peninsula to close the Mediterranean at Gibraltar.

If there is a question in their minds it is not over existence of such plans, but rather as to when and if they will put it into operation. The emphasis at present is on the "when."

I have spent six months on the ground, and I doubt if a day went by when some aspect of this question was not discussed. Two points should be clarified at once—first that a "drive" does not necessarily mean Spanish opposition, and second, that the decision may well be one-sided.

Should the moment come when Hitler considers the campaign necessary, he will make the decision and the Spaniards will be faced by the choice of resisting or facilitating the operations.

The people I talked with felt when I left Spain that the odds, so long as there is no marked change in the tide of war, are strongly against any organized military effort to resist.

Spain May Try to Dodge Issue

It is the general belief, on the other hand, that every effort will be made to avoid the issue.

A widely held opinion is that had Spain been headed by any government not outspokenly favorable to the Axis she would long ago have been occupied.

Matters that must be kept primarily in consideration are:

Will the German high command, if it decides to press the campaign in the Near East, feel it is necessary simultaneously to attempt to close the western end of the Mediterranean?

Will Hitler decide, regardless of whether the war is pressed home immediately against Suez, that he must complete his continental hegemony either by forcing Spain into the conflict or by setting up his own artillery along the Gibraltar Straits?

Now, as to the likely moves in case Spain should enter the war or the Germans should go through Spain to set up their standards on the Mediterranean:

For one thing Portugal probably would be occupied, and if this were attempted by the Germans, any resistance, observers feel, would be short-lived. An interesting development of recent weeks has been regular shipment of troops by the Portuguese south to the Azores. These troops and equipment being sent with them could be salvaged in case Portugal itself were occupied.

For another thing, Gibraltar is prepared as probably never before in its history. It bristles with artillery, is garrisoned for a determined defense and is stocked almost to overflowing with war materials and food supplies.

The British express conviction that here at least the Germans could not pass. Observers, with a few voices to the contrary, either doubt the Rock could be taken or feel the loss of life would be so great that even a victorious attack might prove dangerous in its repercussions.

Naval and military men say, however, that Gibraltar could be merely besieged and harassed while cannon planted on the Spanish shore could command the entrance to the Mediterranean.

The Germans, then, could either attempt to take the Rock, or sit off and fire away at shipping from the Spanish shores. They would have the advantage of air bases in close proximity.

Naval experts are of the opinion that complete stoppage of traffic through the straits would be difficult to achieve. They incline to the belief ships could get through under cover of darkness.

Gibraltar and Portugal are two of the principal places which would be affected by a German occupation of Spain, but there is a third and, perhaps, even more vital point.

This is Spanish Morocco and Tangier, now under Spanish control, where the Germans might gain an important base for operations in Africa.

Other circumstances would have to combine, however, to make German operations from Spanish Morocco and Tangier profitable.

The reference here is to expansion of the German field of operations into French Morocco and thense down to Dakar. Also of creation of such a threat to Gen. Weygand's Algerian flank as to make him hesitate should he wish to throw in his lot with Britain.

Weygand's North African army has been the Vichy government's card in the hole in its dealings with Germany.

Hitler would have to weigh certain very definite problems in the balance before deciding to take the plunge through Spain. He would be faced by serious transport difficulties, would be entering a country where the food shortage is, perhaps, the worst in Europe and would be establishing his forces among a people known for their "harassing" powers.

Railroads in Spain are of a wider gauge than in other countries of Europe.

An army in Spain might be fed from outside, but unless the Spanish people were also fed it would be in the uncomfortable positoin of setting a contrast that might make an undernourished native population desperate.

Either a study of Spanish history or a knowledge of Spanish traits leads to the conclusion that while there might be no organized resistance to an occupation, trouble for the occupying forces could go on indefinitely.

speech.

"We would be derelict in our duty not only to our members but also to the public if we sat idly by merely to maintain our membership. We intend to protect the freedom of radio in opposing all attacks upon it, including those contained in the monopoly report. In so doing we believe that we represent the views of an overwhelming majority of our industry and of the public."

The other resignations were signed by E. M. Antrim, a WGN official and executive secretary of Mutual; Lewis Allen Weiss, general manager of the Don Lee System and Hope H. Barroll, jr., executive vice president of WFBR.

Mutual as a network is not a member of the N. A. B. But it also was announced the network had withdrawn the name of Fred Weber, Mutual general manager, as its nominee for reelection as a representative on the board of directors of the association. The announcement further stated Mutual "will not be represented on this board in the future."

Mutual returned ASCAP (American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers) music to the air tonight after negotiating an agreement with the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers to end its phase of the four-month row over assessments which restricted the use of many hit tunes on the air.

The other networks, NBC and CBS, announced they were continuing negotiations with ASCAP.

The three networks split, 2 to 1, on the question of the FCC monopoly report. NBC and CBS disapproved it. Mutual praised it.

The topic was debated at two sessions today and the organization of independent affiliates passed a resolution condemning it as a threat to free broadcasting.

"In the opinion of this organization comprised of independent stations affiliated with the networks," it read, "the FCC regulations in the present form, if carried out, would have the inevitable result of impairing the service radio has been rendering to the public."

The motion, presented by Harold Wheelahan, WSMB, New Orleans, was passed with only one dissenting vote. The session was attended by 500 representatives of individual operators.

This action followed a brief flare-up on the floor of the convention between Miller and Chairman James L. Fly of the FCC.

Fly declared the Government had "no desire or plans" for taking over the Nation's radio industry and attributed rumors of such action to "men who, to divert attention from the fact of monopolistic control in their hands, conjure up insistently the bogey man of Government operation."

Reporter Tells How Fleet Beat Off Bombers

By Larry Allen
Associated Press Staff Writer

Aboard the Battleship Warspite, Flagship of the British Mediterranean Fleet, May 13.—Back in an Egyptian base after beating off one of the most determined torpedo and bombing attacks of the war and after shelling the Axis base at Bengasi, ship crews of the British Mediterranean fleet loaded new ammunition today with determination to keep the Mediterranean open at all costs.

The anchored battle fleet presented a peaceful picture in sharp contrast to the fiery show I saw Saturday night (May 10) during a 75-minute battle with German planes somewhere between Libya and the Island of Crete.

The planes, attempting to cripple a large war convoy, swooped six times to the attack between 9:15 and 10:30 p. m., but none got near enough to launch torpedoes successfully.

Finally Give Up

The strong fleet escort saw to that by hurling up thousands of shells of various calibers, from 6-inchers to the little pompoms, under the bright moon.

The Nazis finally gave up the raid after seeing their bombs and torpedoes splash harmlessly into the sea.

They returned after midnight, but a brief blast of gunfire was enough to send them soaring off again.

As the fleet was moving convoys eastward, a half-dozen Axis planes attacked last Thursday, and lost two Italian and two German planes and a fifth unidentified type.

They tried it again on Friday, and the fleet air arm brought down another, a Junkers dive-bomber, while damaging several more.

Dive Out of Cloud

On Saurday, as dusk closed in and the moon began to climb, we became aware that the Axis planes were shadowing us again.

Suddenly I saw a formation of at least 12 planes dive out of a nearby cloud toward these battleships, cruisers, destroyers and merchantmen.

The Nazis got the surprise they had planned for the fleet, for as they headed toward the convoyed ships the night was turned bright as noonday by the instantaneous blast of many naval guns.

Forced out of position and unable to launch their torpedoes, the planes skimmed over the sea and headed back toward the line of battleships.

This flagship opened with all her 6-inch and smaller guns in a blast so strong that from my vantage point on an after conning tower it looked as if she were afire from stern to bow.

Continues Over an Hour

The Nazis had to go higher to escape the wall of fire, and again withheld their torpedoes. The anti-aircraft shells looked like multi-colored popcorn balls as they burst.

For an hour and 15 minutes this continued.

Finally the planes dropped their torpedoes and bombs in the vicinity of the destroyers and sped back toward Sicily or Libya, having done no damage.

At the same time, Western Mediterranean naval units were bombed by Italian planes, but also were undamaged.

The sea-air fight was a followup to the bombardment of Bengasi Wednesday night (May 7) by a squadron led by the Cruiser Ajax, one of the victors over the Nazi pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee in December, 1939.

Nosing into the mine-laden Libyan harbor, the Ajax and four destroyers hurled about 100 tons of explosive shells, pounding the mole and, British observers said, scoring direct hits which set fire to two merchantmen in port.

Intercepts 2 Merchantmen

Turning back after drawing the fire of shore batteries, the squadron intercepted two heavily laden merchant ships outside.

One heavy blast from the guns exploded a 6,000-ton munitions ship, the British said, and the second and larger ship was ripped by shells which set off a series of smaller explosions and sent its deck load of trucks and tanks twisting high into the air. The vessel caught fire and ran aground, and was reported burning fiercely when the unscathed British squadron departed.

With the main fleet, I saw the squadron detached for this Bengasi attack and saw it steam back the following day.

On the way east before the Saturday night battle, an Italian life raft was picked up by the destroyer Napier. Deserted, it had in it a bullet hole plugged with a seaman's sock. The British theorized that it might have been a raft of the battleship Vittorio Veneto, which they believed more strongly than ever was sunk in the March 28 Battle of Cape Matapan.

20 U. S. Ships Will Be Sent Into Red Sea

By the Associated Press

New York, May 13.—Intercoastal shipping operators meeting with Maritime Commission officials said today they would turn over approximately 20 ships to the Government within the next 30 days and 20 more by mid-July to rush supplies to Egypt along the recently reopened Red Sea route.

The ships will serve a dual purpose by returning home with defense materials from the Netherlands East Indies, operators said.

Lines represented at the conference included the American Hawaiian, American President, Arrow, California & Eastern, Calmar, Isthmian, Luckenbach, Luckenbach-Gulf, McCormick, Quaker, Weyerhauser and Union Sulphur.

Debate to Open Today On Ship Seizure Bill

The Senate will open debate today on the ship requisition bill, with Administration leaders confident no anticonvoy amendment can muster more than 35 votes.

Senator Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, chairman of the Commerce Committee, which is handling the House-approved legislation, said last night the bill itself should not require more than a day of debate. He conceded that "an anticonvoy rider" might "delay things a bit."

Majority Leader Barkley, of Kentucky, said a convoy debate would take "several days." He added he saw no reason to believe an anticonvoy amendment would get any more votes today than similar amendments to the lend-lease bill.

Isolationist ranks were split yesterday by a dispute over anticonvoy strategy.

Senator Tobey (Republican), of New Hampshire, recalling "my pledge to the people on Boston Common last Sunday," said he would go through with his plan to offer the convoy ban as an amendment to the shipping bill.

Vandenberg Gives Warning

From Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, however, came a warning that defeat of the Tobey amendment "might be interpreted by the interventionists as license to proceed with convoys."

Another isolationist Senator said he believed Congress "should take the position that convoys cannot be ordered without our consent. Let the President suggest convoys to Congress, and then we would get a clear-cut vote on the issue."

Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, said he would oppose any anticonvoy amendment because "it would hamper President Roosevelt in the extremely delicate international situation."

The shipping bill would empower President Roosevelt to take over for British or American use some 450,000 tons of foreign shipping now idle in American waters, including 28 Italian and two German vessels. Vandenberg and Senator Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, will offer an amendment from the floor to bar direct transfer of any of the Axis ships to Britain. The Commerce Committee rejected the amendment by a 10-6 vote.

2 Norwegian Ships Sunk

New York, May 13 (AP).—Two Norwegian ships engaged in ferrying American supplies to England have been sunk in the North Atlantic, marine circles said today.

They were listed as the 4,811-ton Augvald and the 1,608-ton Profit. No details were available.

The ships had recently loaded supplies at New York, Baltimore and Hampton Roads.

9 Cripples Again Besieze McNutt's Office for Jobs

The third sit-down siege for jobs by eight delegates of the Union of Physically Handicapped in the Federal Security Agency Building here ended peacefully last night as the seven men and one woman left the premises at closing time.

Returning to the agency premises at 3 p. m. yesterday the delegates, who had previously staged passive demonstrations Saturday and Sunday, remained until 5:15 p. m.

According to Frank Levine, 30-year-old leader, the group has been "Given the run-around but is not going home without jobs." All members are from New York.

Jesse O. Irvin, assistant to Federal Security Administrator Paul McNutt, declared the agency was powerless to give jobs to applicants not certified by Civil Service.

Nazis in Serbia Predict Near East Blitz in June

By Ray Brock.
Copyright by New York Times

Budapest, May 13.—German military sources in Serbia informed this correspondent that the German high command will order Germany's second great spring offensive through Turkey into Iraq across Syria and against Egypt to seize the immense British petroleum supplies in the Near East and smash the British forces out of North Africa, between the first and tenth of June.

German troops are pouring into huge concentrations at Greek ports and moving steadily through Thrace and Bulgaria to the Turkish frontier, where within less than a month's time, according to the Germans, the assault will begin simultaneously with an "overpowering" offensive eastward along the North African Coast. All troops are equipped for a tropical campaign from top to toe.

Turkey, according to the Germans, will be brought to heel within a fortnight. The Turks will be informed that they must sign the tripartite pact, permit the passage of German troops and equipment, lend air bases to the Luftwaffe, and place roads and railroads at the complete disposal of the German high command, under penalty of a second spring blitzkrieg.

Despite the insistence of some usually well-informed Turkish sources in Belgrade that Turkey will fight rather than capitulate and aid Germany in her "drang noch osten," the few remaining neutral diplomats in Belgrade are convinced that Turkey will give in.

"If Turkey's intentions were to fight," said one diplomat, "Turkey would have cast her lot in with Yugoslovia and with Greece. There is no love lost between the Bulgars and the Turks and most Turkish troops would relish a crack at the Bulgarian army. But the general staff, many of them German-trained, know the strength of the German army and they will counsel compromise, if that is possible.

"Unfortunately, there seem to be few Simoviches in Turkey."

German officers and noncommissioned officers in Serbia, flushed with victory and apparently confident of the future, are amazingly loquacious.

One young lieutenant who wore the Iron Cross for being the first officer to arrive in Sarajevo—"we got there through Croatia in six days"—had just flown back from Athens to Belgrade.

"Everything is almost ready," he said. "There has never been anything like what Germany will show the world now. I was in Poland, Norway, France and in Yugoslavia, but this will be the greatest campaign in our history, greater than anything Count Bismarck could have thought of. This is our knock-out blow. With this we defeat Britain and seize her oil and benzine supplies. With this we drive them out of the Mediterranean and seize the Suez Canal. This is the beginning of the end. . . ."

"What about your invasion of England?"

"Oh, that—" he shrugged, "that is not too difficult, but we are interested elsewhere for the moment. Of course, there always is the chance that your America will play the fool and decide to fight against us. The German soldier is not mad at your President Roosevelt. Why doesn't America leave Germany alone?" He did not wait for the answer, but when on rapidly:

"America is in a very dangerous position now. Once we hold Africa and the Near and Middle East, America will have no front left on which to fight. Our submarines will sink her troop transports and our bombers will fly out and bomb the warships and even America itself. Oh, it may look difficult now, but the Fuehrer has plans for America if she forces this war upon us."

"And when will this German offensive in the Near East get under way?" it was asked.

"Well, in Athens they say it will start the first week in June or in the second week, at the latest—anyway, before the middle of June and probably about the tenth," he said. "We are repairing the rail lines and sending our tanks and other equipment into Greece for loading."

"For Syria?"

"For Syria—and other places." He paused and smiled. "And the bombing that we will give the British fleet in the Mediterranean will be the most glorious in our history. We have thousands of planes. Thousands! All of them in bases on the Mediterranean now or just a few miles away. We shall bomb the British ships until the sea is black with their wreckage—and we shall be in Cairo in July."

"July?"

"July! Before the middle! We're sure of it. Why, in Athens we saw. . . . (a high-ranking air force chieftain). Do not use his name, please. We saw things that would astonish you. All this—the 'sieg' in Yugoslavia and Greece, the campaign through Turkey and Syria and the attack in North Africa, was planned during the winter. We had to make a few changes when the Italians—aren't they the funniest soldiers in the world?—did so miserably in Africa and when these fools of Serbs tried to stand up against us. It has slowed us up just a little. The schedule is about a month behind now, but we shall make it up!"

Charlotte Hunter Pension Vetoed Again by President

In the face of a reported understanding with its Congressional sponsors that he would approve the measure, President Roosevelt yesterday vetoed, for the second time, a bill to make Charlotte E. Hunter, colored former school teacher, eligible for teacher retirement benefits.

The bill passed both House and Senate after members assured their colleagues that the President, after further consideration, no longer objected to the measure.

During consideration of the bill, it was pointed out that Miss Hunter, who resigned prior to the effective date of the retirement act, had studied, at her own expense, kindergarten methods in Europe and had instituted a similar system in Washington public schools.

R. A. F. Bombs Nazi Territory For 11th Night

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, May 13.—Continuing its relentless pounding of Germany and occupied territories for the eleventh successive night, R. A. F. bombers last night dropped more tons of high explosives and incendiary bombs on the important German industrial City of Mannheim, setting whole blocks of buildings ablaze.

The industrial center of Ludwigshaven, on the opposite bank of the Rhine, was also heavily bombed. At Cologne bombs set fires among railway sheds and elsewhere in the center of the city, the British said.

Fires were also started in other strategic Rhineland factories. Other British squadrons bombed the docks at Ostend, in Nazi-occupied Belgium, and at Dunkerque and St. Nazaire, in France.

The R. A. F. lost one plane in the widespread attacks. A British bomber, returning from Germany heavily damaged a Nazi night fighter plane which rose to attack it in the bright moonlight, sending the German plane spinning earthwards, with smoke pouring out.

Meanwhile, the Luftwaffe took a layoff in its attacks on Britain, following the heavy losses last week, culminating in the shooting down of 33 Nazi planes in the mass onslaught on London last Saturday night and early Sunday.

A few raiders came over Britain during the night. One enemy plane was destroyed by British defenses last night and another was officially reported bagged today.

[The air and home security ministries announced, according to the Associated Press, that additional information had added one more German plane to last Thursday's daylight bag of 14 raiders—a 1941 record—and three to the number shot down in overnight raids on England Sunday night and early Monday. This brought to 12 the total for that night.]

According to revised figures 137 Nazi night raiders were shot down at night in the first 12 nights of May—adding up to a loss of at least 600 German airmen for the Luftwaffe in the period.

New Tax Program Unnecessary if Income Reaches 90 Billions, Attorney Tells Committee

By Cecil B. Dickson
International News Service Staff Writer

President Roosevelt's own budget figures show that the proposed new $3,500,000,000 tax bill would be unnecessary if the national income reaches the $90,000,000,000 mark, the House Ways and Means Committee was told yesterday.

A. Harding Paul, Washington tax attorney, said the present Federal tax structure would produce $12,400,000,000 next year, only $300,000,000 short of Secretary Morgenthau's goal of $12,667,000,000. Congress, he said, could easily cut nondefense spending this amount.

Paul used President Roosevelt's 1940 budget estimates as his base. Mr. Roosevelt then said that the 1938 tax structure would produce $10,600,000,000 if the national income would be upped to $90,000,000,000. Since then Congress has enacted two tax bills, estimated to return an additional $1,800,000,000 on a $74,000,000,000 national income.

"If, therefore, the President's budget message of 1940 correctly states the revenue to be raised on the basis of a $90,000,000 income," Paul said. . . . "There would seem to be little or no necessity for any tax bill at this time since by economies Congress should be able to reduce nondefense expenditures by at least $300,000,000."

Difference in Estimates

Paul cited that Morgenthau told the committee national income would be 90 billions in the coming fiscal year and that defense price administrator Leon Henderson estimated 95 billions. He also said there was a $6,000,000,000 discrepancy between Morgenthau's 12-billion and Henderson's 18-billion dollar defense spending estimates for next year. These should be composed before a tax bill is imposed on the people, he said.

Democratic committee members, meantime, revealed that Secretary Morgenthau wants to raise more money than his original program of $3,500,000,000, in view of Henderson's defense spending estimate. One member said Morgenthau's program might not raise over $2,500,000,000 when the committee got through with it.

Morgenthau gave a dinner Monday night at his home for "insiders" on the committee during which Assistant Secretary John L. Sullivan gave a preview of revised plans to boost the excess profits taxes on corporations to raise $800,000,000 instead of $400,000,000 from this source.

Several Plans

Chairman Doughton (Democrat), of North Carolina, announced Sullivan would present the plans to the committee Friday. Morgenthau, meantime, was reported looking with favor on proposals of Chairman Marriner S. Eccles of the Federal Reserve Board and Henderson to boost the excess profits taxes, while Sullivan was said to be standing by his original proposal to raise only $400,000,000 from corporation excess profits taxes.

"There will be several plans submitted and the committee can decide on which to take," Doughton said. "They've got a bear by the tail on excess profits."

Republican members planned, meantime, to fight for $1,000,000,000 cut in nondefense spending. Ranking G. O. P. Member Treadway, of Massachusetts, summoned them to a meeting today to devise a program.

Representative Jenkins (Republican), of Ohio, the only member of the committee who refused to vote to pledge to raise $3,500,000,000 in new revenue, told the House that by rigid economy on nonessentials, the tax bill could be cut to $2,500,000,000.

Announcing he was awaiting a reply from Secretary Morgenthau on his request for specific recommendations on how to cut nondefens expenditures $1,000,000,000, Jenkins said:

"This question of economy is a live issue and the people are demanding that the Congress and the Executive here in Washington do their utmost to economize."

British Cut Atlantic Ship Losses in April

Copyright by New York Tribune Inc.

London, May 13.—Despite the fact that Britain's April shipping losses were the third worst of any war month, allowance for the heavy sinkings of the military evacuation of Greece show that the British navy has heavily reduced the losses of vital merchant tonnage in the Atlantic and elsewhere, an admiralty official said today.

Total April losses were 106 ships of 488,124 tons, but 187,054 tons were losses in the Greek military operations. Deducting these sinkings in the evacuation losses on ordinary shipping lanes were 301,070 tons—the lowest since last June, the month of the Dunkerque evacuation of the British army in France. In June, record-loss month of the war, 533,902 tons of British-held or British-controlled vessels went to the bottom of the sea.

The sinkings for March this year, second worst month of the war, according to revised admiralty tabulation were 119 ships, or 489,229 tons; January was the lowest loss month since last June, with 306,002 tons sunk.

The new corrected total of sinkings for 20 months of the war ending April 30, was 1,508 vessels of 6,127,773 tons, or an average of 306,384 tons a month. In the four war months of 1939, September to December, 211 ships of 741,614 tons were lost. Sinkings for 140 were 929 vessels of 3,768,700 tons, and for 1941 to the end of April, 368 ships of 1,617,359 tons.

Noting the snarp drop from the near-record March (1941) sinkings, to the figures for April in the ship zones outside Greece, an official said, "April gives us an indication that measures for the protection of our ships are being effective and that there are no signs that the enemy's great effort will enable him to obtain the quick victory he needs."

A breakdown of the figures released today showed that more tonnage was lost in the Greek evacuation than the far larger evacuation at Dunkerque, involving more than 300,000 men 11 months ago. While 187,854 tons were lost in Greece, the Dunkerque sinkings were 117,286 tons.

Some commentators remarked on the small size of the freighters lost during the whole course of the war as indicated by the total figures. According to the tabulation, the average vessel sunk was of but slightly more than 4,000 tons.

Mrs. Roosevelt Says Son John Will Join Navy

John Roosevelt will be the fourth son in the country's first family to get a service commission. At her first press conference in several weeks, Mrs. Roosevelt revealed yesterday that her youngest son, "who has always felt strongly opposed to fighting," has decided to line up for service.

He feels that he would far rather fight than take the risk of living in a world dominated by certain powers, she said. He is to be an ensign with the Navy Supply Corps and will be reporting for active duty in a few weeks.

The First Lady said further that, in contrast to James and Franklin Roosevelt, jr., John did not take an R. O. T. C. course in college. However, he has been taking correspondence work in connection with Supply Corps work for some time and will finish that phase of study in a month. She said he would not be permitted into any other branch of naval service "because of his eyes." She added that although he was in the draft age, his number probably would not have been called for some time. Elliott, her second son, is now an officer in the Air Corps.

Parachutes, changes in draft rulings, and the President's promises to keep the country at peace—if possible—were subjects touched on at Mrs. Roosevelt's conference. Pickets at the White House, a recent letter threatening her life, and Mother's Day sentiments also came in for some attention.

Peace—If Possible

The First Lady emphasized that, so far as she knew, the President had always qualified his statements about keeping America out of war with the phrase "unless we are attacked," or something similar. She added that she knew he meant what he said when he promised that boys were not being drafted to fight on foreign soil, and that from the beginning he had every intention of keeping America at peace—if possible.

"No President would want to send his country to war," she went on, "but I don't see how anybody could make a promise about a circumstance before it had arisen."

Mrs. Roosevelt approves some of the proposed changes in draft rulings and said that she believed the plan to lower the draft age would be a good thing. She added that she believed there was much more uniformity in draft rulings than at first and that she looked forward to the time when still other changes would be made. In this connection she mentioned that "a better job on health" could be done.

A conference that touched on a variety of subjects revealed that the "flying First Lady" is quite sure she won't be landing anywhere in a parachute any time soon, if at all. After she had briefly discussed the Hess landing in England ("most interesting; like a mystery story"), somebody asked if she had ever been in a parachute. She never has; and never expects to be, she said.

Could Be Waste of Time

Pickets in front of the White House? Well, she wasn't at home on Monday night, and she did think it was just "about as well to let people do what they wish, so long as it's within the law and doesn't infringe on the rights of others." Furthermore, she was of the opinion that "beating people up might be going a little too far."

She went on to say, however, that in certain instances picketing might be a waste of time for people who could be doing something a lot more useful.

Mrs. Roosevelt knew only what she read in the newspapers about the threat to her life during her recent lecture trip to the West Coast. The letter never reached her at all, but was sent to the police commissioner in Los Angeles. Some time before she made her speech there, she was informed that somebody had written to say that if she appeared on the platform she would be shot. But her lecture went on as scheduled and she wasn't uncomfortable, for many threatening notes have come her way before, she added.

Mother's Day? The First Lady doesn't approve of it. She rarely hears from any member of her family when that day rolls around. If there must be a day, why not make it a Mother's and Father's Day? she asked.

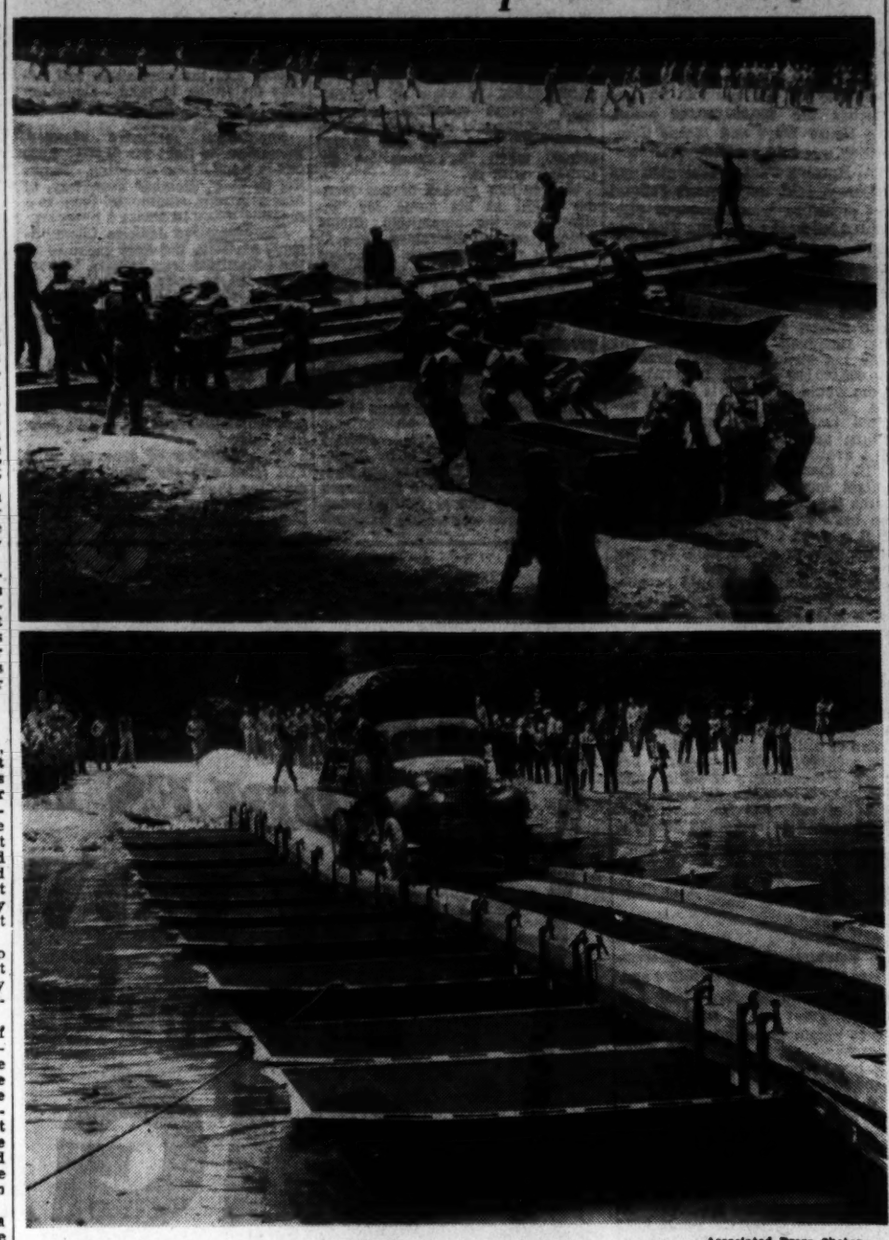
One bit of misinformation recently published about the First Lady was corrected by her before the end of the conference. She will speak for the Women's Division, Democratic National Committee, at its meeting in St. Paul on June 7. But her talk is not to be "an answer to Lindbergh." However, she's not making any promises to stop commenting on the Lone Eagle's stand on the foreign policy.

White House Easy For Selects to Visit

Service boys on leave soon will have a chance to view the interior of the White House without having to get in line with a flock of tourists.

At her press conference yesterday Mrs. Roosevelt announced that beginning May 31, and continuing each Saturday thereafter, only service men in uniform and those accompanying them (wife, sweetheart, mother, or other relatives) will be admitted to the White House from 10 to 12 a. m.

Army Engineers of Former Days See Display Of Modern Combat Technique at Fort Belvoir



Associated Press photos.

ARMY ENGINEERS SHOW THEIR SPEED—Using newly designed 5-ton pontoon bridge system, a company of engineers in training at Fort Belvoir, Va., yesterday threw a span across Dogue Creek in 16 minutes. Top—The first unit is put in the water. Lower a squad of builders ride across the completed bridge in a transport truck

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Writer

How a concrete pillbox would be captured in combat, with TNT and blazing gasoline and all the grim ingenuity of fighting engineers was demonstrated to 400 members and guests of the Society of American Military Engineers yesterday at Fort Bevoir, Va.

This demonstration by the Thirty-first Engineer Company climaxed a day of inspection with the society, in convention here, guests of Brig. Gen. Edwin H. Marks, post commander. They saw how modern combat engineers are trained, how they march and fight and build roads and bridges and fortifications and tank blocks and perform all the countless tasks the fast-moving mechanized warfare of today demands of the fellows who work with one hand and fight with the other.

They drove in a long convoy of buses and trucks through Fort Belvoir's 15,000 acres and saw most of its 1,000 buildings. At work in woods and underbrush, beside streams and at Gunston Cove, they watched its 16,000 officers and men, of whom 10,000 are selectees in training, go through their daily routine.

Many of them former Army engineers trained in the pick and shovel school of military engineering, they saw the infinite variety of machines the modern engineer puts to work in paving the way for the riflemen. They saw huge six-wheel drive trucks in uncounted numbers, water purification units and portable electric plants large enough to serve a division, portable air compressors with power saws and spades and drills. They saw bridges, footbridges buoyed on plastic tanks, plywood and inflated rubber assault boats, a tank ferry, a portable traffic light, all the myriad mechanical appurtenances of a modern army at work at the most important engineer post in the United States.

Greeted by Gen. Marks, they were warned by Capt. T. C. Lipscomb, of the Engineer School, that they would have to be given a "blitz demonstration," so huge are the post and its activities. That was what they got.

Alongside Dogue Creek they watched the Eighth Training Battalion, composed of colored selectees, build a floating foot bridge in the record time of seven minutes. Then Company E, Fifth Engineers, put up an experimental 5-ton pontoon bridge in 16 minutes, so far ahead of schedule that the visitors were given time to see the bridge rapidly dismantled after a truck loaded with soldiers had creaked over and back.

After lunch served by Headquarters and Service Company, Fifth Engineers, from gasoline field kitchens on the bank of Gunston Cove, the visitors were convoyed through the Replacement Center. There they saw barracks of Companies A and B, Fourth Training Battalion and visited the theater and service club. A demonstration of how to build timber fixed bridges and quick erection of prefabricated steel truss girder and reinforced trestle bridges followed a trip through an area where the First and Ninth Training Battalions were throwing up wooden barracks designed for use near the front lines. After an inspection of field fortifications being built by elements of the Fifth and Sixth Training Battalions, the visitors watched 12 members of the Thirty-first Company blast an imaginary enemy out of its reinforced concrete pillbox.

First two men, supported by artillery, machine guns and riflemen, crept forward with a long bangalore torpedo with which they blasted a path through the little fort's protecting ring of barbed wire. That done, riflemen and men with TNT and bottles of gasoline wrapped in cotton followed, flinging themselves to the ground after short, breathless rushes from tree to tree and hummock to hummock. While machine guns stuttered on both flanks and riflemen poured a protecting fire ahead, the demolition men rushed in, hurled their explosives and their Molotoff cocktails into the pillbox and watched it disappear in a welter of flame and acrid smoke.

Before breaking up to return to Washington, members of the society were addressed by Col. J. Franklin Bell, their executive secretary and editor of the Military Engineer, who expressed their thanks to the commander and officers of the post for "devoting their facilities to our entertainment and instruction." Rear Admiral L. O. Colbert, chief of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and vice president of the society, expressed appreciation for "an excellent program" and a "wonderful day."

115th to Hold Blackout Drill

Fort George G. Meade, Md., May 13 (AP).—The 115th Infantry will be blacked out tonight as the regiment undergoes its first all-night maneuver since reporting to Fort Meade for training.

The regiment, commanded by Col. D. John Markey, will work out a problem on moving into defensive areas under cover of darkness and organizing, occupying and providing all around protection of those areas.

But the greatest problem the men will face probably will be the ban on smoking and noise. It's a long stretch from 10 at night when the men march out of the regimental area until 6 in the morning when they return.

Residents of nearby Odenton are likely to think the enemy has arrived when the more than a thousand silent 115th Infantrymen march through the village late at night on their way to the locale where the problem confronts them. Near Odenton the regiment will return to the military reservation.

Just so the men won't have to maneuver through the night with wet feet a pioneer section will construct a 12-foot footbridge over a shallow stream in the sector where the problem will be worked out.

Each of the three battalions will use their reserve company to outpost the battalion front. That company also will provide flank and rear protection during the maneuver. The front-line companies will provide their own local security and will furnish patrols for reconnaissance of the area beyond that held by the outpost.

By the end of the summer Fort Meade's selectee reception center will have 30 additional buildings and will be large enough to accommodate 2,500 recruits, officers at the center said today.

At present the capacity is 1,500 men at a time. About 20,000 recruits have passed through the Fort Meade center since November and have received uniforms and preliminary training while awaiting assignment to permanent training camps.

Half Measures Not Enough, Menzies Says of U. S. Aid

New York, May 13 (AP).—Australian Prime Minister Robert G. Menzies tonight urged America to a "single minded effort in the production of materials of war and in the delivery of those materials to those places in which they can be effectively used."

"It may be that there are still many of you who believe that some decent fraction of your effort will suffice," he said in an address prepared for the NBC-Blue network. "I beg of you to understand that it will not. Whether you are neutral or belligerent—and that is for you and nobody else to decide—our cause, which is your cause, cannot be made victorious by half measures."

He declared, however, that the United States' aid need not include the sending of armies, asserting that the British Empire "will fight this war out, even if it fights alone against many enemies."

"I am not asking you to pull our chestnuts out of the fire," he went on. "The British Empire is not asking for charity. It is full of brave and resourceful people. What we shall give to the winning of the war is all that we have—no less.

"Does anybody in the United States imagine that Australia would be fighting in this war if this was a merely European struggle? Of course not. Our choice is between the regimented barbarity of the Hun or the honest and impartial rule of the self-made law."

Maverick, Quin Run Neck and Neck

San Antonio, Tex., May 13 (AP).—Mayor Maury Maverick and the man he defeated to come back politically two years ago after losing his seat in Congress ran virtually abreast in early returns from today's municipal election.

Only 11 votes separated Maverick, a friend of President Roosevelt, and former Mayor C. K. Quin on the basis of returns from 58 out of 136 precincts. The vote was: Maverick 7,186, Quin 7,197. The total vote was estimated at 36,000. Observers saw the possibility of a run-off election.

Manning Asks U. S. to Enter War Openly

Copyright by New York Times

New York, May 13.—Calling not only for delivery, "at whatever risk," of United States war shipments to aid Britain, the right Rev. William T. Manning, Protestant Episcopal Bishop of New York, declared today that "we should now take our full and open part in this conflict."

The bishop's plea, in effect for convoys and armed intervention, was punctuated repeatedly by bursts of applause from 700 clerical and lay delegates who heard him at the 158th annual convention of the Episcopal Diocese in Synod House of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

Referring to the Axis in the war, Bishop Manning declared that "never before has this world been threatened by a power so avowedly evil, so shamelessly inhuman, so far reaching and with such military might." This country, he said, faces "the greatest crisis, and the most momentous decision in our history."

"In this world conflict all that we hold sacred as Christians and Americans is at stake," he continued. "There can be no compromise between democracy and Hitlerism. There can be no peace or security, or decency, in this world until this monstrous power of evil is defeated and overthrown . . .

"The time is past for refusing to face the facts, or for thinking that we can meet this deadly threat by half measures, or for trusting that Great Britain may be able to hold out no matter what we do, or fail to do. It is time now, and more than time, for definite, fearless, decisive action."

Bishop Manning reminded that President Roosevelt and high Government officials had publicly warned the country "how grave the situation is."

"Certainly we must deliver our shipments of aid to Great Britain by whatever means may be necessary and at whatever risk may be involved," he went on.

"But the real question is—is this enough? Does this meet our full obligation as a nation? Can we go on accepting our present protection at the price of the heroism, the sufferings and the lives of those men and women in Britain? In this day of crisis, for us and for the world, is it enough for us to give the tools while others are giving their lives?

"I hold that to meet our obligation as a nation, to insure the defeat of the Hitler forces, and to keep the war away from our land, we should now take our full and open part in this conflict and give our military and naval authorities power to take whatever action in their judgment will be most effective, in conjunction with Great Britain."

Bishop Manning disclosed that he had received many letters charging that he was trying to take this country into the war, and he said the answer was "We are already in the war."

U. S. Will Disregard German Warning And Send Cargo Vessels Into the Red Sea

Gulf of Aqaba; (south) to the Tropic of Cancer.

"The waters of Saudi Arabia are excluded. Regulation for travel in the designated operations area by specially marked pilgrim ships has been reserved."

(This apparently referred to ships carrying Moslem pilgrims across the Red Sea to Mecca—a constant traffic in that part of the world.)

Propaganda Suspected

Other officials than Dempsey said that there were no United States ships in the Red Sea but that a group of vessels were loading cargoes for a dash to that region.

Dempsey's comment reflected a view generally held here last night that the German announcement was a propaganda move intended to scare the Administration out of its plans to supply the British Near Eastern armies via the Red Sea route.

This implied threat to sink American ships was regarded officially here as an empty gesture unlikely to be backed up with force. Officials said it was not feasible for the Germans to enforce a counter-blockade in the Red Sea.

Calm About Mines

The warning that Germany would try to enforce its decree by sowing mines by plane did not excite authorized officials. They pointd out that one American cargo vessel, the City of Rayville, was reported sunk by a mine November 9 off the Australian coast.

The complacency with which Washington received the Berlin warning was attributed by some officials to the fact that Germany had already announced that any American vessel carrying lend-lease supplies to Great Britain would be sunk on sight, thus the inclusion of the Red Sea in the war area by Germany did not alter the situation.

Maritime Union Asks Bonus for Red Sea

The National Maritime Union, C. I. O., which supplies nearly all seamen for ships on the Atlantic Coast, is demanding that its members be given a "war risk" bonus for sailing ships to the Red Sea.

In a telegram to the American Merchant Marine Institute, the N. M. U. asks a bonus of $2 a day and $50 a port for every port of call in the Red Sea and the Persian Gulf.

The N. M. U. also asked a bonus of $2 a day for seamen on American ships sailing to the Far East.

Threat Expected, Says George

Copyright by New York Times

There was no official reaction last night from the White House or the State Department to the decision of the German high command to designate the Red Sea as a war zone where neutral shipping is in danger, but neither was there the slightest indication that President Roosevelt would alter his recent decision to permit American merchant ships to enter those waters.

Senator George (Democrat), of Georgia, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, termed the German action "just an expected threat as a result of our decision to send ships into that area."

Representative Bloom (Democrat), of New York, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said that the United States could not be bound by any declaration the German government made on what was and what was not a combat zone into which its ships could travel.

Hearings Are Set On Recreation Bills

Hearings on two proposals for administration of Washington's recreation facilities will open Tuesday at 10 a. m. in the House District Committee room, Representative John F. Hunter (Democrat), of Ohio, chairman of the parks and recreation subcommittee, announced last night.

One of the bills would place a nine-member board in charge of all play facilities here. A second measure would set up the office of recreation supervisor to administer recreation in conjunction with directors of playground and community center activities.

Senators to Get Pay Bill Tomorrow

In event reports from interested agencies can be secured in time, the Senate District Committee will meet at 10 a. m. tomorrow to consider the Capper bill for staggered Federal pay days, Senator Robert R. Reynolds, committee chairman, announced yesterday.

Senator Arthur Capper (Republican), of Kansas, author of the bill, said he had been "encouraged by the many favorable comments" on the measure from his colleagues.

Capper said he would attend the committee meeting and ask "prompt" consideration.

Von Papen Sees Turkish Foreign Chief

Ankara, May 13.—German Ambassador Franz Von Papen began his expected talks with Turkish government today as Axis circles openly discussed the possibility of sending aid through Syria to help the British-pressed forces of Raschid Ali Beg Gailani in Iraq.

The former Reich Chancellor, who has been unsuccessfully tryingto to win Turkey over to the German side, called on Foreign Minister Shukru Saracoglu this morning and remained for a lengthly conversation. He bore no notecase with him, indicating that he had no particular documents to present.

Later Saracoglu attended a morning cabinet meeting and this afternoon he reported to national party delegates on the general foreign affairs situation.

What was discussed by the two men was impossible to ascertain. German sources say that Reichsfuehrer Hitler has no intention of making any political demands upon this country and Von Papen's daughter, who returned with him yesterday, has already told many of her diplomatic friends that "everything will be quiet here."

British circles are not convinced by these assertions. One member of the British Embassy said that he frankly suspects that Germany will not limit itself to economic demands, but that some sort of other request will be forthcoming.

Informed Turkish sources, on the other hand, express a conviction that the Reich will seek to negotiate an expanded commercial treaty with Turkey, which is now largely cut off from trade with Britain by Axis control of the Aegean Islands and trouble in Iraq, but that Von Papen will not try to alter Turkey's proclaimed sympathies.

These sources emphasize that Germany considers she has warm relations with Turkey based on the fighting alliance in the last war, and it is apparent that Nazi propaganda will play upon this theme.

The Turkish view has already been made amply clear. This country does not intend to alter its foreign policy, according to official sources, and it does intend to defend itself against aggression or any kind of threat to its national integrity.

Coming And Going

A careful reading of the debate on the Overton-Hunter bill indicates that the House rejected it chiefly because of a prevalent belief that taxes in the District are low in comparison with those of other cities. The House was told again and again that Washington has "a mighty low tax rate"; that the bill ignores the ability of local residents to pay the city's expenses; and that Washington is fortunate in having a large Federal pay roll here. Congressman Rees, indeed, complained that local residents are not paying "their fair share" of the city's expenses, and said he would raise no objection to a Federal contribution, if needed, when the community did its part.

This line of reasoning might have been convincing except for the fact that the House itself has prevented the community from "doing its part." Various legislators assailed the District as if it had failed to meet its own obligations. Representative Hunter had to remind his colleagues that "we levy the taxes" and "we spend it [the revenue from District taxes] as we see fit." Certainly the failure of Congress to give Washington a modern revenue system is no excuse for also rejecting a fair and equitable division of expenses between the Federal and local governments.

Many speakers candidly recognized the pressing needs of the District. In an appeal for fairness to the voteless Capital, Representative Sauthoff expressed concern for the health of local residents, pointed out that many schools here are not fit for children to attend, and asked for improvements in the water system. The emergency resulting from concentration of thousands of defense workers here was also recognized. Thus the debate frequently suggested that the House might be eager to pass a District revenue bill, even though it was loath to consider a systematic formula to regulate the Federal payment.

Yet only a few weeks have passed since the House ripped to pieces a bill to obtain more revenue by amendment of the income tax. Indeed, the Overton formula appears to have been pressed at this time largely because of the adamant stand taken by the House against its own committee's tax bill. The House has repeatedly declined to make the local income tax really workable. It is no less hostile to feasible revenue bills for the District than to an increase in the Federal payment. Its only policy in these matters appears to be to slap the voteless District coming and going.

Of course, these arbitrary decisions cannot be permitted to stand. Revenue to meet Washington's pressing requirements must be found. The issue must be raised again, and fortunately Senator Overton seems disposed to keep it warm until a final solution is found. For the present the House has utterly refused to exercise its responsibility of legislating for the Capital City. That is a powerful argument in favor of granting the District a government of its own. In the meantime, however, its fiscal problem must be solved even at the cost of another protracted fight in Congress.

Installment Buying

It looks as if installment buying would be the next American habit to be brought under control. At least the Federal Reserve Board is reported to be seeking authorization to establish tighter controls over installment credits. The automobile would be singled out for initial action because it accounts for a large proportion of the country's installment paper. Moreover, the needs of the automobile industry conflict at many points with those of the defense program. Of course, there are other more direct and more efficacious ways of reducing the competitive pull of the automobile industry, such as cuts in car output (promised for the next model year), and heavy excise taxes on automobile sales, as recommended by Messrs. Eccles and Henderson. Nevertheless, there is much to be said for tightening credit terms on installment sales of various kinds of durable goods as a means of curtailing consumer buying and releasing labor, materials and plants for more essential defense uses.

For reasons only indirectly connected with defense, also, it is desirable to keep a sharp watch on installment purchases. With pay rolls expanding and employment mounting, many people unemployed or underemployed during the years of depression will be sorely tempted to purchase on time articles they really cannot afford. Such individuals need protection against their own imprudent impulses, and this is an opportune time to provide such protection by insisting upon heavier down payments and shorter payment periods. With many industries confronted by material and labor shortages, or loaded up with orders they will have difficulty in filling, opposition to restraints on installment buying will be weakened. Certainly it is not too soon to establish safeguards in this field for protection of the seller, the buyer, and the national interest.

Gift From The Heavens

The abrupt flight of Rudolf Hess from Germany to England, there to become a voluntary prisoner of war, is by all possible odds the most sensational news of the war—so sensational, indeed, that almost anything that may follow must seem in the nature of an anticlimax. This sensationalism is heightened rather than diminished by the mystery which still surrounds his motive. But, though the many implications of his action are by no means apparent, we may be sure that, whatever they are, they will have tremendous repercussions throughout the entire world. Here is a gift, coming literally from the skies, that may prove to have such incalculable propaganda value to the British as to make their military losses seem, by comparison, unimportant.

But to say, as some have done, that this incident is utterly without counterpart in history is something of an exaggeration. At least two roughly analogous historical instances (aside from such cases as those of Benedict Arnold and Gen. Monk) come readily to mind, though the circumstances may be slightly less spectacular. Both instances are from the French Revolutionary Wars. One occurred one morning in August, 1792, when Gen. de Lafayette, one of the great figures of the Revolution, dismissed his cavalry escort and, attended only by a few friends and servants, rode off into the Austrian lines. The other occurred about eight months later when Gen. Dumouriez, Lafayette's successor as commander of the Armees du Nord, hero of Jemappes, and Minister of War in the French Revolutionary cabinet, left his army and fled to the Austrian camp with a handful of followers, including the young Duc de Chartres (afterward Louis-Philippe). A few years later Dumouriez was in England to advise the government of that country how to meet the threat of a French invasion which he himself had planned in detail. Meanwhile, the Austrian Emperor had locked up Lafayette in the dungeon at Magdeburg.

Of course no such secrecy surrounded the internal events of Revolutionary France in 1792 and 1793 as surrounds the internal affairs of Nazi Germany today. The outside world was at least vaguely aware of the intra-revolutionary conflicts of Feuillant and Girondist and Girondin and Montagnard. Nor was the technical apparatus for flight (in both senses of the word) then available, so that the case of Hess seems by far the most dramatic of the three. However, Lafayette and Dumouriez fled for the very good reasons that their necks were in danger, and it is a reasonable assumption that a similar sense of danger was among the complex of emotions which inspired the flight of Rudolf Hess. But whereas Lafayette seems to have contemplated nothing more than escape, Dumouriez, even before his peril became acute, had entered into correspondence with the enemy with a view to "saving humanity." And, curiously enough, some dispatches have put these very words into the mouth of the latest and greatest of the German refugees.

Iraq, Syria, Vichy

The British are making slow but steady progress in Iraq. The "nuisance war" begun by Rashid Ali el-Gailani on behalf of his Nazi paymasters appears to be petering out. Nonetheless, the situation in Iraq is still loaded with dynamite. Already Hitler has more than recompensed himself for the gold he has liberally dispensed among his Arab Quislings. For he has forced the British to divide their military effectives in the Middle East and allocate part of their not over-large air force in that sector to Iraq. That he has thus far failed to provide Rashid Beg with assistance can be attributed not to any lack of a desire to do so but to the difficulty of sending such aid directly.

The situation in the Middle East would be very different and very much worse for the British if Turkey should capitulate to Nazi demands or if the Vichy government should permit the passage of German troops through Syria. Then the British would have a real fight on their hands. And both of these possibilities must now be reckoned with. In withdrawing Russian recognition from Belgium, Norway and Yugoslavia, Stalin seemed to give the first clear indication that he is prepared to embark on a program of servile cooperation with the Third Reich. He has followed up this move by establishing diplomatic relations with the pro-Axis government at Bagdad. That is bad news for the Turks, Britain's neutral ally, and for the British themselves. It begins to appear that once again, as in September, 1939, the Soviet Union is about to play the jackal role.

In the meantime there are ominous indications from Vichy that the Petain government may soon agree to expand the measure of "collaboration" which has hitherto obtained between unoccupied France and Berlin. Such "collaboration" is now fairly complete in the economic sphere. Thus the assumption must be that any further move in that direction will be in the political sphere. One aspect of that kind of collaboration might very well be an agreement whereby Vichy would promise to interpose no obstacles in the way of a German use of Syria as a corridor for an attack on the British forces in Iraq and ultimately for a drive on Suez from the north. Such a move would only be a counterpart in the eastern Mediterranean for action which the Vichy government had previously taken vis-a-vis the Japanese in French Indo-China.

Marshal Petain has steadfastly resisted pressure to make the Vichy government the willing handmaiden of the Nazis. But whether he will succeed in preventing the use of Syria by Hitler is by no means certain. The star of Admiral Darlan, who more and more takes on the semblance of a Laval in a blue uniform, is still rising. And Darlan is anti-British to the point of being ready to play Hitler's game, and liking it.

Year Of Churchill

A year ago today the British turned to Winston Churchill, and made him Prime Minister. He was at once faced with both a fearful dilemma and a herculean task. The measure of the dilemma is slowly coming to light. It was not so much the tornado-like sweep of the Nazi britzkrieg across the Low Countries that caused the dilemma. It was the uncertainty about France. There could have been no doubt about the bravery of the French soldiers, but Churchill, with his fine intuition, had his doubts about the loyalty to the Allied cause of Premier Reynaud and the French military chiefs. Events, unhappily, proved Churchill to be right. Yet, till the overrunning of France, the British had to endure the agony of having to send men and material and planes into what Churchill and the British leaders must have regarded as a rat hole. Perhaps the historian may conclude that the very speed of the French collapse saved Britain. At any rate, the British from then on could concentrate single-mindedly, with American aid, on their own defense, and Premier Churchill could apply himself to the task of a century.

In these 12 months Mr. Churchill has proved himself to be one of the greatest leaders in his country's history. He may, indeed, turn out to be the greatest of them all. Yet, though he was hailed on May 14 last year as the man of the hour, the British people only a few weeks before had pretty generally doubted his fitness for any such role. The matter-of-fact British thought of him as too chameleon, too pyrotechnic, too given to taking chances. Of course, he would make an admirable Defense Minister (when it should become necessary to face the need for such an appointment), but, as they used to say, "You have to keep a checkrein on Winnie." Then all of a sudden the opinion changed and only Churchill would do as the leader of the nation. What was the explanation? Perhaps it was that the British people mix their lack of knowledge of politics with a superb political sense which, as De Madariaga would put it, has no particular seat of gravity. They felt that only an extraordinary man could handle an extraordinary situation.

Thus the gadfly turned leader. But the amazing and paradoxical thing about Churchill as Prime Minister of Britain in the greatest year in British history is that he has stopped being extraordinary. He expresses rather than leads. The quality in Churchill's leadership which shines above all others is his ability to focus and channel the genius of a great people. Shakespeare says the occasion oft provides the man; if it doesn't, then you can put it down that the people have become decadent. Churchill and fighting Britain dovetail so perfectly that he has become the very image of the British people. And the best tribute that could be paid to him is that he has been worthy of a nation who have been stretched to the full limit of their faculties.

AUTUMN NIGHT

His muzzle lifted to the moon
Whitening on the lakeside dune

The old dog carves a silver grief
From the burning autumn leaf,

From the lost warm winds of spring
Blown southward on a summer wing.

He has no midnight pain to bear,
No scar of thought he yet must wear,

But in his sense the long white light
That leans upon the jeweled night

Is emblem of an old unrest
He keeps unnamed deep in his breast:

A passion and a terror born
Before the petal or the thorn,

Before the gaunt and glacial lake
Or the tall heron in the brake.

His master indoors hears the sound
Leap hollowly along the ground

And leans to stir the charring logs,
His dark mind fearful as the dog's.

The Only Real Authority

Letters To The Editor

For Free Speech

If we were at war, the duty of every American would be clear: To strengthen and unify the national effort. But before a national emergency has been declared by Congress, it is the duty and the privilege and the sacred right of every citizen to speak his mind openly and straightforwardly, without fear or intimidation, whenever and wherever he can find an audience. Only by frank and open debate, and a dispassionate weighing of the facts, can the people decide which course they wish to follow. And that choice still rests with the people.

It has been claimed that the isolationists are dangerous and subversive and tend toward disunity; but the suppression of them, of any portion of the American people, is far more dangerous to the cause of democracy. We hate naziism because it is intolerant, and we are beginning to see the same intolerance in our own land; we hate naziism because it is bigoted, and we see the same bigotry in our own land; we hate nazism because it crushes the individual, and we see now, in our own land, any individual with a mind of his own howled down by the mob, reviled and persecuted publicly. We ought instead to thank our God that there are courageous men who will not hop on the American bandwagon, who will not wave the flag, who will not be a Charlie McCarthy to anyone's Bergen. For the real enemies of democracy, the real Fifth Columnists, are ignorance and bigotry and intolerance, no matter what language they may speak, no matter what flag they may wave.

Conscientious Objectors

The letter in The Post of May 10 by Msgr. G. B. O'Toole is certainly worth preserving. He writes: "Dr. Ryan need have no fear 'of the conduct of a conscientious objector being followed on a large scale'; the average man is not made of such heroic stuff."

In a democracy, minorities have their rights as well as majorities, and any democracy that does not recognize that is not a true democracy.

I take it that conscientious objectors are opposed to what they consider wrong, no matter where or what it is, and when a government is wrong, in their thought, they refuse to go with it—so would any honest man.

Taxes

Why all the wrangling about taxes? Collect from incomes from whatever source derived. Tax the penury of the poor if they like, but don't overlook the abundance of the rich. A tax of 10 per cent on $1,000 leaves $900 (which would let a poor man live about as well as a rich man's dog). While 95 per cent on a $1,000,000 would leave $50,000. A graduated war tax on incomes from 10 per cent to 98 per cent would be just as there won't be any incomes, or freedom either, if we are conquered.

Roger Babson

May I recommend to the attention of and strongly urge the reading by every reader of every word of Roger W. Babson's double-header article "Business Outlook," in The Post of May 12? May I quote from Babson's closing paragraph: "Only a little more than a year ago Hitler struck at Norway. His progress to date in spreading disaster is shocking in its threat to the American way of life. Perhaps for us to realize this menace and the necessity for cooperative thinking and action, the sinking of one of our warships will be necessary. . . . We talk of our ideals and beliefs, yet shut up our eyes and plug up our ears to the real sights and sounds of the day. . . . Our deficiency of spirit may lead to our disintegration. . . . We must all speak up for righteousness, heed the call to sacrifice and toil to the limits of our capacities." He says that our program of defense is seriously bogging down, not so much because of bottlenecks, strikes, shutdowns, which should be cleared up in short order, but because of the real bottleneck, which is our spiritual attitude.

Two Profiles

An English magazine recently had a competition in which prizes were awarded to the reader who sent in the most appropriate quotations from Shakespeare applicable to Hitler and Mussolini respectively. The winning entries were: Hitler—

"He's a most notable blackguard, an infinite and endless liar; an hourly promise breaker, the owner of no one good quality." ("All's Well That Ends Well.")

Mussolini—"Italian fiend. Ah me! Most credulous fool. Egregious murderer." (Cymbeline.* V-5.)

Expressions Of Appreciation For National Folk Festival

Mrs. Gregory, my daughter and I took occasion to witness the Folk Festival last week and we want you to know the genuine pleasure we derived from it.

This is in my opinion a most unusual program and I think those of you who sponsored this movement are to be congratulated, for the talent presented is of a highly educational and informative nature.

NOBLE J. GREGORY.
Member of Congress from Kentucky.
Washington, May 9.

Having enjoyed the privilege of attending and sharing in the programs of the seventh and eighth National Folk Festivals, held in Washington, and sponsored by The Post, I just wish you to know how much I have enjoyed this interesting experience.

I have met people and seen such a variety of programs at these two Festivals that I am fully convinced that The Post is helping most efficiently the work of keeping alive the rich heritage of the past which is so ably expressed in varied programs presented by so many different groups and individuals. Keep up the good work, and thus keep alive for the education of future generations those precious memories and traditions of long ago, for in this rapidly changing world many valuable records are sure to be destroyed.

May your great paper, The Post, long continue to sponsor the National Folk Festival and aid it to reach even farther into the lives of the people of America.

WILL E. AYER.
Fitchburg, Mass., May 10.

As one of those very much interested in the folk traditions of this country, I want to thank you again for your sponsorship of the National Folk Festival.

I have heard many enthusiastic comments and reports about the Festival this year. It seems to me that you are making a very valuable contribution to the preservation of the traditions and spirit of America by sponsoring this Festival.

The Festival being held right in Washington draws the attention of people all over the United States. It is of great value to the traditions of this country of ours and I appreciate very much your making this possible.

JAMES G. K. McCLUNE.
Asheville, N. C., May 9.

On behalf of my group, the Dance Group of the Legion of Young Polish Women, I wish to write a few words in appreciation of your sponsorship of the National Folk Festival.

At the inception of our group we only planned on performing at our own club dances. They came off well, and I wondered if other national dances were being revived and preserved in a like manner. I later learned of the National Folk Festival and decided to speak up for the group by writing to Miss Knott. After correspondence by airmail, specials, etc., an invitation was tendered and accepted. This meant the smoothing out of our dances, completing costumes and the even greater task of searching for data concerning authentic Polish traditions and folklore. This rekindled my own desire for knowledge of the same. All this data was passed on to Miss Knott, who in turn printed it in part of The Washington Post program. You may be assured that the members of my group read and reread the various paragraphs concerning other dance groups on the program. I feel that each member of the group knows a little more about his or her father's homeland, and appreciates a little more dearly those so-called "old-fashioned ways" which, I am sorry to say, seem to be brushed aside by the fast tempo of life today. Because we all were so conscious of our own efforts in giving the performance we appreciated the efforts of others in their parts in the Festival.

The Festival was interesting, because it contained other dances dissimilar to that of the Polish, and, yet, did show marked similarity in parts. One interesting incident was the playing of a tune, which was 125 years old, by two violinists from Virginia. This tune was brought to Virginia by a Polish dance master who taught the polka and other dances popular at that time. This tune was handed down from father to son until this present day. This certainly does show how all nations have contributed something to American folklore. It should make us realize that America is great not because of any one nationality but by the welding together of the best from all nations.

The National Folk Festival certainly should be fostered because it brings under one roof items of common interest, such as folk dances, songs and history to peoples of all races, creeds and sects. It is only through such common interests that a more friendly understanding of all peoples can be brought about. The fostering of culture and folklore creates good will through understanding. Without this we all would be totally mercenary in thought and have only business rivalries to remind us of people of other countries. These opinions would not be of the best in many cases. So, please, continue with the National Folk Festival, since it does promote a friendly interest in the happenings of other peoples.

The Post Impressionist

Mr. Bell's Invention

The family which gets the most satisfaction from the telephone is the one that has decided to have it torn out by the roots and thrown away; but that is hardly practicable for most of us. We might want the doctor in a hurry, or be subject to other emergencies in which time is of the essence. Therefore we have to put up with the thing.

That this is no easy matter was called to my attention afresh about 5 a. m. the other day. I had had perhaps four hours of sleep when the house was filled with a clangor that I recognized, after groping back to consciousness, as coming from the telephone.

As I believe the one thoroughly justifiable reason for having a telephone is that it can be used in an emergency, I finally got to the instrument.

"Hello . . . is Wes' there?" a thick voice queried.

Now there has never been a "Wes'" at my house, and if he has the sort of drunken friends who want to talk to him at 5 a. m., I hope there never will be. Nor is the particular example of the telephone instrument in my domicile made of asbestos; yet it survived.

It was a long time after that before I got back to my sleep, and in the meantime I had thought of a lot more things to say to Wes' friend, as well as of a lot of things about the telephone in general. Most of them are not included in the smoothly written treatise that the telephone companies issue every once in a while, instructing us exactly how to use their nefarious invention. And they passed completely over the formulae that the system's Emily Posts have evolved for speaking over the wire so that the person at the other end will be able to hear and understand what you say, how you are, where you are, and be impressed favorably with your manners as well as your enunciation.

All these things are very well in their way, especially for the telephone company; but they are not enough to balance, on the point of either esthetics or manners, the lamentable and grievous damage that the telephone is capable of inflicting on individuals who have a modicum of human sensibility. Among other things, they have produced persons who simply can not resist answering the telephone. If such devotees are in the midst of a conversation with a person who has come a thousand miles to see them, they will withdraw their attention in the very middle of a sentence if the bell rings and reach for the rudely interrupting instrument. It doesn't matter a whit if the summons is from some radio company which wants to know what program the subscriber has been listening to, or from a salesman who wishes to make an appointment to come in and see him in person, or whether it is simply a wrong number, the matter has to be attended to at once.

The threat presented in any company by the existence of such slaves of the machine as this has been overcome, so far as I know, by only one class of persons . . . and this is composed of ministers of the Gospel, when engaged in the most respectable of their high and holy rites, and then only in the church itself. They have overcome it only by seeing that no telephones are installed in the pulpit and that none, by any manner of means, can be plugged into the pews. (I mention this last fact in the hope that no telephone company will take advantage of my observation by having pews, at least in my church, plugged for phones.)

Besides slaves, there are persons who are not so much slaves of the telephones as its tormentors and evil genii. In this group I would include those who are so oppressed by inertia that they can not manage to stir out of doors, or even sometimes out of bed, but feel that it is necessary to establish some contact with other human beings. They do not seem capable of doing so through books, and they become dissatisfied with the radio and phonograph, for they can find no way to talk back to them. Therefore they reach for the telephone and call up the first number that pops into their heads. From that point on the wires simply drip, and with nothing that could not as well be left unsaid.

There is a great deal more than the few scattered remarks above that I could say about the telephone, but there isn't space; and, besides, my three minutes are nearly up. Also there is no type of slug that I can drop into this instrument to get additional space. But I should like, in closing, to refer to one class of lucky soul who have found a way to lick the whole racket (racket being used here in the original meaning of the word). This is to have unlisted phone numbers.

Universal practice of this reliance would do a lot to cure the whole silly business. It would be possible then to have telephone books with entirely blank pages, upon which you could draw whirligigs while phoning the persons who, because they trusted you, had given you their numbers. And if you should ever become really bored you could still dial some numbers at random, for the sake of seeing whom you would get.

Such dialing as the latter might lead to a great increase in the amount of democracy in America. As with Lord Halifax when he goes for a ride or a walk, you would never know whose acquaintance you would be able to make. You might even, before you were done dialing, get on the other end of your wire none other than Lord Halifax himself! And that, of course, would do a great deal to take off the instrument the general curse that seems to have been pronounced upon it.

Herbert Hoover

By Ernest K. Lindley.

The Illogic In His Radio Address

IN HIS RADIO address Sunday night former President Hoover approved aid to Britain but opposed American entry into the war. His desires on these two questions are in accord with a majority of the American people. Insofar as public opinion can be gauged by polls and conversations with newspapermen and politicians who open their ears to their constituents.

LINDLEY

Mr. Hoover ostensibly separated himself from the extreme isolationists who make it a point to complain that we are "stripping our defenses" to aid Britain. He flatly favors stripping ourselves of weapons to make them available to the British. Actually, we are not stripping ourselves; we are keeping what we need for training purposes and, by and large, letting the British have the remainder. Mr. Hoover insinuates that the President is holding back material the British should have.

BUT MR. HOOVER does not explain how these weapons are to be got to the British. He glosses over the critical question of the day: how the lifeline from North America to Great Britain is to be protected. In one part of his speech he says merely that the British need merchant ships to replace their losses and "minor naval warships" to guard their sea lanes.

But Mr. Hoover warns against the use of our Navy to protect the North Atlantic sea lane. He is against either "patrols" or "convoys." For "that is joining the war, once and for all."

He explains also that air attacks have made naval protection of merchant ships an infinitely more difficult problem. He says we cannot convoy without establishing naval and air bases abroad, with garrisons to protect them. So what the British can do, in one part of his speech, with "minor naval warships" becomes, for us, in another part, a formidable problem.

If we protect the sea lanes by patrols or convoying, Mr. Hoover declares, we "must at once increase our Army to 3,000,000 or 5,000,000 men." And that, he says, means we will have fewer weapons to spare for the British.

Why must we increase our Army to 3,000,000 or 5,000,000 men? Mr. Hoover does not say. On the contrary, he devotes part of his speech to showing why an Army of 3,000,000 or 5,000,000 men would be useless. To transport overseas an army of 5,000,000 men we would need at least 40,000,000 tons of ships. It would take "ten years" to build the ships, and after we had them we might not be able to land the men.

AND, ACCORDING to Mr. Hoover, "Hitler could not start toward the United States without equal preparation."

Mr. Hoover completes the demolition of his own argument by saying that "substantial army fighting seems likely to go into the background for many years." If that is so—as it probably is, so far as Europe is concerned—why would we set about building an Army of 3,000,000 to 5,000,000 men? Our naval and military experts are presumably no less intelligent than Mr. Hoover, who at no time in his career, including his years in the Presidency, has demonstrated a grasp of naval or military questions.

If, as Mr. Hoover insists in parts of his speech, this is chiefly a naval and air war, our more active participation does not imply the dispatch of large expeditionary forces. As he states, there is not enough shipping and could not be enough for a long time to transport large American forces abroad. All the shipping that can be mustered will be needed to carry supplies to the British and their allies and the Chinese.

THE CASE against a declaration of war can be put much more accurately than Mr. Hoover puts it—although he is more against war than he is for aiding Britain. War, it may be noted in passing, does not necessarily mean bankruptcy or the inability of the Government and the Nation to cope with the aftermath of another war. It may be presumed that the aftermath of this war will find a man in the White House who understands more of finance and economics than Mr. Hoover does. The odds are overwhelmingly against our having quite such bad luck again.

Indeed, Mr. Hoover wants us to go "all out" in manufacturing weapons for Great Britain. The economic effects of a great diversion of production to armaments are the same, whether the armaments are used by Britishers or Americans.

LIKE MR. HOOVER, this column is opposed to an American declaration of war. A declaration of war would, or might, imply commitments concerning the liberation of Europe which we could not execute, or at least which would cost more than their consummation would be worth to us.

Effective aid to Britain is a different question. The production for British use which Mr. Hoover advocates will be useless unless it is placed in British hands." To place it in British hands may cost some American casualties. But, unless we lose our heads, it does not follow necessarily that we must assume the irrevocable obligations involved in a declaration of war.

Mr. Hoover's speech reflected either a clumsy politician trying to make a comeback, or a muddled mind. Maybe they are the same thing.

Fair Enough

Senator La Follette

SENATOR ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE of Wisconsin, the chairman of the so-called Civil Liberties Committee of the Senate, made a speech last week in which he referred to "some obvious fallacies" in the understanding of the reasons for strikes in the defense industries. These must be exposed, he said, and I suggest that while we are exposing fallacies we consider also the fallacy of Robert M. La Follette. Many public men, notably Senator George W. Norris of Nebraska, Senator Bob Wagner of New York and Senator La Follette, get by indefinitely on past performances or early publicity. Senator Norris, who once spoke with the most sonorous piety about the sanctity of elections, saying, "If we wrongfully influence the voter we are striking at the very foundations of free government," was one of those who recently attended the disgraceful ceremony in the Capitol in which a statue to the late Huey Long was unveiled to mock those very principles.

Other attendants at the same evil affront to free government were John H. Overton of Louisiana, whom Huey Long elected by fraud and whom Senator Norris did not exert himself to expel, and Allen J. Ellender, another member of the late dictator's corrupt and terroristic gang. Senator Ellender was one of the managers of the fraudulent and vicious campaign by which Senator Overton was elected, but Senator Norris, nevertheless, joined them in a tribute to their late fuehrer, thus signifying a change of attitude toward those who strike "at the very foundations of free government."

IT IS COMMONLY understood now that Senator Wagner was not the actual author of the Labor Relations Act but merely the sponsor of a scheme to create a great class political group resembling the labor front in Germany which was sold to Congress and the citizens as labor's Magna Charta. He refused to accede to amendments intended to protect the citizens from terrorism and the economic death penalty by the field managers of this labor front and, even though it has since been demonstrated beyond question that his law has had this effect, he still opposes amendment.

So time and developments show clearly where Senator Wagner stands on the question of the human dignity of those who insist on a right to work at lawful occupations without the sanction of racketeers or communists and subject to the public laws and taxes only. He is against them.

Senator La Follette, however, has been going along smoothly, picturing gracefully and accepting bows, and cannot be blamed for thinking himself quite a master of deception. He has been making vast publicity for Senator La Follette through an investigation of "violations of the right of free speech and assembly and interference with the right of labor to bargain collectively."

In his New York speech he said the adoption of laws to bring labor unions under legal controls would constitute a legislative lynching bee, blamed employers for the majority of defense strikes and said the notion that strikes are an enjoyable exercise for the worker is so silly that it would evaporate automatically.

He is clever, but he can be analyzed if you refuse to let him confuse you. In the first place, of course, labor unions, as he knows, are as guilty as any employer ever was of violations of the right of free speech and of the worker's parallel right not to join a union, but the Senator doesn't go into that. He is serving his reputation and promoting his career with his political following by pretending to believe that employers only are guilty of wrongs against workers and of violence in union troubles.

TO BLAME employers for the majority of defense strikes, of course, is to confuse the question, because rarely do we get to the bottom of the causes of such strikes and, moreover, penalties already exist for guilty employers. He only insists that it would be "lynching" to adopt laws whereby professional, irresponsible unioneers could be punished equally for equal offenses. And, of course, nobody ever has contended that workers enjoy striking, so that strawman blows away on a gust of the Senator's own hot air.

On the contrary, he knows that thousands of strikers have bitterly resented the compulsion to strike at the orders of their union bosses. But Senator La Follette couldn't expect to go into that, because he has been getting away with an act for years and doesn't expect to be challenged.

I notice in one of the reports of the Senator's long and expensive hearings a reference to the little steel strike at Johnstown which will indicate how fallacious he is. This portion undertakes to expose as a fallacy the "rumored invasion" of Johnstown by 40,000 mine workers, and the Senator obviously believes that by editorializing he has reduced the danger of that invasion to a mere myth.

But the files will show that at times John L. Lewis wired President Roosevelt warning him of this invasion and attempting to disown responsibility for violence that might occur. So the threat was not so fallacious, after all.

Senator La Follette has had a good press for years, but all public men should be called up for periodic reputation inspection. Many of them develop a disease that might be called pernicious fallacy.

The National Mind

By Mark Sullivan.

The Drift Of Public Opinion

THEY SAY President Roosevelt prides himself on his ability to guess the national state of mind, the emotion of the crowd. They say he is watching the national mood closely, in order to chart his own course, whether to go farther toward the war, or remain "short of war." They say his estimate of the present stage of the national mood will guide him in the speech he is scheduled to make May 27. The speech was originally scheduled for May 14. They say, whether accurately or not, that the postponement was due to a wish to let the public mood advance farther.

SULLIVAN

THE NATIONAL mood is an intangible thing, difficult to estimate. This column last Christmas—in the somber spirit of a holiday that belied the word—made a venture not in estimating the national mood but in diagnosing it, identifying the cause of its unhappiness, its bitterness and self-recrimination. In part, that attempt at diagnosis said:

"If some physician of the mind were to minister to America's soul, he would diagnose our national spirit as being afflicted by a disease with a Greek name, 'schizophrenia.' It is not really a disease, it is an affliction of the mind and soul.

"The characteristic of this distress of the spirit is that it divides the mind in two, sets one part of the mind at war with the other—the literal Greek meaning of schizophrenia is 'split personality.' It can arise when a mind has two wishes which are inconsistent with each other, so that it is impossible for both wishes to be attained. Unless the person thus afflicted has the resolution to give up one of the wishes, he is certain to suffer unhappiness.

"Today, practically all America entertains two wishes. First, practically all wish Britain to win the war. Second, practically all wish America should stay out of the war. Between these wishes, our national soul is torn. Both wishes clamor at us every day, pursue us into sleep. Those of us who put principal emphasis on the one revile those who put principal emphasis on the other."

BUT MERE diagnosis is of little use unless it throws light on the outcome. Can we, by bringing this diagnosis up to date, by comparing the state of the patient last December with his state today, can we find toward what end the disease is moving? In the intervening four months, has the patient undergone change?

The answer is yes. There is a thermometer of the patient's progress in the various polls of public opinion. By that thermometer, measure the two wishes separately.

On the one, do you wish Britain to win, the answers last year were some 95 per cent yes. The percentage continues the same to this day—if anything, the wish for Britain to win increases and grows more intense.

But on the other, do you wish America to stay out of the war, the number who answer yes diminishes. The question in that form is rarely asked by the polls. Sometimes it is phrased, "Do you think America should enter?" Or, "Do you think America should enter if without our entry Britain would lose?" However the question be phrased, it is clear that the number who wish America to enter, or are willing she should, increases.

What is happening is that one of the patient's wishes is crowding the other out. In proportion as England's struggle is more desperate, the wish that she survive remains constant—but the willingness that America help her survive increases. Thus does the patient progress toward having not two conflicting wishes but one dominating one. And thus does the patient progress toward spiritual health.

THERE IS another test, less pretentious than the polls, but fully as convincing. Take your two wishes, separately, into any American gathering, public meeting, group of neighbors, cigar-store crowd, sidewalk kibitzers, say to them that you wish America to enter the war, you'll get an argument, sure. But it won't be bitter, really. Those who argue against you will respect you. Nobody will knock you down; you will be allowed to depart in peace, and as you go the respect of the crowd will follow you.

But to that same crowd, or an equivalent one, express the other wish. Say that you wish Hitler to win—which is the same as saying you do not wish Britain to win. Now, you will get a real argument. You won't walk away from that crowd; you'll be carried in an ambulance.

For that matter, why bother with tests or escoteric polls. The whole thing, the change in the American mood, has been officially measured and recorded in formal statutes. Eighteen months ago Congress passed an act, the neutrality law, making it a crime, punishable by imprisonment, for any American citizen to sell supplies to Britain on credit or to loan money to Britain. (While the statute, of course, said "any belligerent," Britain was the only nation to which it could apply.) That was public opinion as registered by Representatives in Congress on November 4, 1939.

SIXTEEN months later, March 11, 1941, Congress passed an act, the lease-lend measure, by which this Nation loaned Britain $7,000,000,000, to be followed by more.

Is not this trend plain? It may be wise or not—about that history may know better than we. Some of the ablest among us doubt whether making formal war on Germany at this time is the better way. But it is clear that American emotion is crystallizing and heading toward one direction. Watch your step, lieber Adolf. I suspect we'll be seein' you.

Director Of Shipping

THE INTENSE concern over the shipping situation here is indicated by agitation for changes in the management of our own shipping resources. Powerful sponsors have already laid on the President's desk a project for dividing the United States Maritime Commission in two. If the project is approved, construction of new ships will continue to be directed by the present commission chairman, Admiral Emery S. Land, while the use of existing shipping will be controlled by a new administrator, as yet unnamed.

The project is no criticism of Admiral Land, but rather a measure of the magnitude of an enormous problem. The task that is intended for him would stagger most men. The shipping situation now calls for hasty revision of the American shipbuilding program, to produce not between 1,500,000 and 2,000,000 tons over a considerable period, but between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 tons annually.

There is talk of Samuel Zemurray, the picturesque and dynamic head of the United Fruit Co., for the proposed new post of shipping administrator. Whoever the administrator is, he will work jointly with the British, represented here by Sir Arthur Salter. It is to be hoped that Zemurray may be chosen.

WHILE the new project is being considered, the Maritime Commission has not waited to prepare American aid at sea. The news has already been given to the world of the twenty-six freighters that will carry supplies to the British forces fighting in Egypt. But this is only part of the story of the President's announced plan to use nearly 2,000,000 tons of our shipping, taken out of intercoastal service, for getting material across the Atlantic.

The twenty-six freighters destined for the Red Sea are the first of a total fleet of eighty. The ships are now being called in from other runs, and if all goes according to schedule will leave for their destination in groups of five every week for sixteen weeks. Their routes have already been laid out, from here around the Cape, up to the Red Sea ports, and then out again, around India, to Malaysia, where they will pick up rubber and tin for our defense stock-piles and start again for home. A regular round-the-world shuttle service is to be maintained, in fact. Control headquarters are soon to be established at an unnamed port in Africa, to watch over the ships at that end.

The eighty freighters in the Red Sea-around-the-world shuttle will sail under the American flag, since the combat zone has been changed to allow American ships to enter all ports they will visit. Fifty more freighters will be placed on the transatlantic route to Britain. As this requires entering a combat zone, and as it is desired to keep down changes of registry of American vessels, it is intended to use the recently seized German, Italian and Danish ships for this run. But if the Senate effort to keep them out of British hands is successful, then fifty American ships will have to be transferred to British, Panamanian or some other registry. Finally, twenty-five tankers have already been made available to carry oil to Britain from Venezuela, and another twenty-five will be turned over shortly.

THE PROGRAM is impressive. Adding the four fast freighters sent to the Mediterranean during the Greek campaign, and the six merchantmen now being converted into small aircraft carriers for convoying in the Atlantic, the total of shipping to be made available to Britain comes to about 1,725,000 tons. But the real question is whether the program is right.

Admiral Land and the staff of the Maritime Commission have strongly contended from the start, in every White House conference on the subject, that releasing merchant ships without providing protection for them was a wasteful policy. As the figures printed in this space some days ago clearly prove, it is worse than wasteful; it is close to suicidal. The combined total of British and American shipping is now just adequate, if properly protected at sea, to maintain the British war effort. If proper protection is not given, shipping totaling one-third of the merchant fleet now supplying Britain will be sunk before the year ends. Replacements by construction take many months. And although we may tide the British over the hump just ahead, we shall find ourselves hopelessly short of shipping when the time for an offensive comes next year.

To this dilemma there are but two solutions. One is brusquely to abandon the present national policy of aiding Britain, accept the prospect of a German dominated world, and take immediate steps to appease Hitler, trusting in the same hope that inspired Chamberlain, Simon and their friends. The other is to afford the protection now needed by shipping at sea. Taking half measures, which is simply a way of drugging the mind into forgetfulness of the situation's realities, will only end in disaster.

Flight To Freedom

The Hess Affair: Symbol Or Fluke?

OF THE MANY men who have surrounded Adolf Hitler since his evil star began to rise in the European firmament few have been closer to him than were Capt. Ernst Roehm and Rudolf Hess. Roehm, leader of the once powerful S. A. (the brown-shirted storm troopers), was liquidated in the blood purge of June 30, 1934, together with hundreds of others. Now Hess, "the indispensable Hess," as John Gunther has called him, has fled the Reich and found sanctuary in—of all places—Great Britain.

NOVER

Why? A communique issued in Berlin, the latest of many on the Hess affair, would have us believe that Hess's flight was the product of a "hallucination" that he could, through personal intervention with old English acquaintances, bring about an understanding between Germany and England. Some, looking a handsome gift horse in the mouth, suspect that Hess is only playing a role asigned to him in a plot whose nature is as yet unrevealed but whose purpose bodes no good for the British. After all, it is pointed out, Hess' outstanding characteristic over a period of many years has been his fanatical loyalty to Adolf Hitler. It is incredible to believe that he has overnight become a new person. The most obvious explanation that is being offered for Hess' fantastic move, but one which cannot be dismissed because it is so obvious, is that Hess was simply fleeing for his life, with Great Britain the only safe place to flee to.

THESE VARIOUS hypotheses need examining. None can be dismissed out of hand. But some are less credible than others. The least credible happens to be that Hess is acting as Hitler's catspaw. And the reason why that hypothesis lacks credulity is that the various statements that have come out of Berlin regarding the Hess affair have on their face been the product of bewilderment, confusion and distress.

Only yesterday Hess occupied a place on the left of Hitler. He was Hitler's deputy in the Nazi Party and as such in active control of the party machinery. He was, next to Hermann Goering, Hitler's heir-apparent. He had served as Hitler's secretary in the years when Hitler was struggling toward power, had taken down "Mein Kampf" from the lips of the Fuehrer when both were serving prison sentences for their part in the 1922 putsch. Indeed, "Mein Kampf" is dedicated to Hess.

Now the Nazi press is telling the German people that Hess has for years been suffering from a serious physical debility, that he had for a long time been acting queerly, that his action constitutes a deep personal tragedy.

IN TAKING this line the Nazi propaganda is inevitably creating certain doubts in the minds of the German people which will hardly help German morale. If Hess is all the Nazi press now says he is, then, obviously, Hitler and his entourage have been fooled. On May 1 Hess had been allowed to make one of the principal speeches. He was present at the last meeting of the Reichstag. Not the slightest indication had previously been given the German people that anything was wrong with Hess. In other words, the Nazi propagandists are trying to make the best of a bad job and are not succeeding any too well. By no stretch of the imagination can it be assumed from the tone and substance of the Berlin communiques and press comment that the episode is designed to be a smoke screen behind which a diabolical drama is to be unfolded with Hess in a wholly Machiavellian role.

MORE PLAUSIBLE is the explanation, given currency by the Nazis themselves, that Hess flew to England to see what he could do by way of bringing about an Anglo-German understanding.

Possibly that is what Hess had in mind when he left Augsburg in a Messerschmitt fighter and flew to Scotland. But assuming for purposes of argument that this was the motive behind his flight, one of two other possibilities must be assumed. The first is that Hess is crazy, as the Nazis now say he is but which the British firmly deny. The second is that Hess was not crazy but regarded the trend of German policy with a clear-eyed awareness of its possible dangers and sought to deflect it into less dangerous channels.

DURING RECENT days signs have been multiplying that another deal between Nazi Germany and Soviet Russia is in the offing, and that it may be one of far-reaching scope.

In the first place Joseph Stalin has made himself premier of the Soviet Union. Since he has long exercised the power he has now openly assumed, there must be a reason for his action. The reason may very well be his decision to carry out a policy of far-reaching in scope and perhaps so dangerous in nature that only his prestige can carry it through. Such a policy would, for instance, be Russia's adhesion to the Tripartite Axis. And already the preliminary steps toward a new German-Russian deal have been taken by Moscow. Stalin has withdrawn recognition from the governments of Norway, Belgium and Yugoslavia. He has established relations with the pro-Axis government of Iraq. The Soviet press has vehemently denied that any increase in Russian military forces has occurred along the extended Russo-German border. Connected with these developments, perhaps, is Franz von Papen's sudden return to Ankara. Turkey may play the role in the new German-Russian arrangement that Poland played in the last.

There is no love lost for Germany in Russia, nor for Russia in the Third Reich. Russia's move is dictated by weakness. Unable or unwilling to fight Germany, Stalin may decide that the wisest course to pursue is to cooperate with Hitler, hoping thereby to gain time to build up Russia's defenses against the inevitable day of reckoning with the Reich. On the other hand, Hitler may be anxious to secure Russia's tacit or active aid in helping to drive the British out of the Eastern Mediterranean and the Near East and may be willing to pay a good price for such cooperation. He may calculate on the possibility that a new German-Russian deal will increase the strength of defeatist sentiment in the United States and thus inhibit or force the abandonment of the program of all-out aid to Britain. Again, there may be Germans, including high-placed Nazis, who view such a deal with the Kremlin as shortsighted, dangerous and ultimately ruinous. Hess may have been one of them. And there probably have been others. To carry out such a policy, another purge of the 1934 variety may be necessary.

IN ANY EVENT Hess' flight is likely to prove a body blow to Hitler. At a moment when he is cashing in on the great prestige gains arising from his Balkan victory, when the Lindberghs and others are trying to persuade the world of Germany's invincibility, it will be regarded as a sign that behind the facade of Nazi strength and unity there are schisms and disunity. And the flight of Hess will raise very disturbing thoughts in German minds. For the Germans are now being asked to choose between believing that the Nazi government was lying to them when Hess was being portrayed as a great Nazi hero or that it is lying to them now in describing Hess as a broken-down maniac. The Hess affair is a tremendous windfall for the British.

The Gallup Poll

86% of U. S. Voters Ready to Fight Should South America Be Invaded

By Dr. George Gallup,
Director Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., May 13.—The President has frequently stressed the importance of a united hemisphere defense for North and South America. The question which naturally arises is whether American public opinion is deeply concerned with what happens in South America, or whether the people are largely indifferent to the fate of the republics to the south.

A Nation-wide survey of public opinion by the institute indicates that the future safety of South America is a question of great moment to the American people, and that the Monroe Doctrine is a very live principle in their minds.

An overwhelming majority are willing to have the United States go to war if any South American country is invaded. Far from being indifferent to the fate of those nations, voters in favor of military action if South America is threatened have nearly tripled in number in three years.

The trend of sentiment is shown in four successive institute surveys, the first in March, 1938, and the latest completed within the last week. Note the difference in attitude before and after the outbreak of the European war in September, 1939.

"If Brazil, Argentina, Chile or any other Central or South American country is actually attacked by any European power, do you think the United States should fight to keep that European power out?"

Those with opinions on the subject voted as follows:

	Yes	No
March, 1938	33%	67%
September, 1939	53	47
February, 1941	86	14
Today	86	14

The South American issue is one about which people have strong opinions. Only one person in every 20 (6 per cent) was undecided in the survey.

A week ago the Institute reported a survey showing the number of people who would want the United States to fight if Canada—the country immediately to the north, were invaded. The results showed that 90 per cent would be willing to fight under such circumstances—a figure only slightly higher than the number who would want to fight if countries to the south of the United States were attacked.

Additional evidence of national concern over South America comes from earlier studies by the Institute. It was reported in February, for example, that 88 per cent think Germany will try, or is already trying to get control of Central and South American countries, and that 93 per cent think the United States should do all in its power to prevent such Nazi inroads.

The younger generation of Americans, the male members of which would have to do the fighting if the United States went to war to protect South America, is just as strong in its sentiments as the older generation.

On the age group under 30 years, 86 per cent think the country should fight if South America is invaded, as compared with 87 per cent in the age group 30-49, and 85 per cent in the group 50 and over.

Loans for Air Plant Trainees

By the Associated Press

The Government is planning to buttress the work of the aviation industry, States and municipalities in training of aircraft workers by making loans to young men for technical training.

One of the potential brakes on the production of the massive fleet of airplanes which President Roosevelt has called for is the skilled and semiskilled labor supply—welders, riggers, riveters, electricians, mechanics and even plumbers.

Some of the factories, even with the aid of extensive schooling facilities at their command, have been hard put to keep up with the demand for airplane builders. In some instances they vied with each other in offering high wages, but "raiding," as it was known, was halted by a manufacturers' agreement.

With the demand for workmen multiplied many times by the accelerated program, and with a backlog of $4,000,000,000 in Government orders, the factories are intensifying their search for the men they need.

None of them wants to trust the building of a $350,000 bomber or a $50,000 pursuit plane to amateurs or apprentices, because when a four-motored bomber or a tricky 350-mile per hour interceptor plane takes to the air, every screw, rivet, rib and connection in it must be set perfectly. Otherwise the plane and its crew may be written off as a total loss.

Some of these manufacturers and operators of technical aviation schools throughout the country urged that the Government spend a small part of the defense appropriations in a revolving fund for loans to students at low interest rates to enable them to finish intensive courses in from a few months to a year.

The Civil Aeronautics Authority is setting up such an organization in cooperation with the Federal Security Administration to establish a fund which will be given Government support to complete their training and pay back their loans in small monthly amounts out of their earnings after they have finished school.

Bill Cunningham's Column

Pilgrimage to a Spot In a Hanover Store

By Bill Cunningham

Hanover, N. H.—I always come back to this quiet place, but with neither the mood nor the emotion of H. M. Pulham, Esquire, returning to his hallowed St. Swithin's.

I have memories all right. Some are pretty private and pretty precious. But, too, some are hard, and some are even bitter. I had to slug my way through this place, as an executive of the only, and therefore the leading, motion picture temple, the vice president, you might say, in charge of bill-posting, piano playing and sweeping out.

Neither can I flee here to the mothering arms of alma mater to escape the shock and terror of life's stark realities. I met plenty of that right on this general property. My best girl jilted me, a most fortunate happensance, for which I since have many times devoutly thanked a wise and all-governing heavenly Providence. But it hurt, brother, at the time. The pangs were simply terrible.

Memories That Blister

Here's where I had to rassle out the problem of going to war, with a widowed mother almost 2,000 miles away, not much chance to see her first, and nobody to talk it all out with. Talk about memories that bless and burn! I've got some of this holy village that practically blister.

Still, I keep coming back, and I know I'll always be coming back, but it's usually for a definite reason. The definite reason this time was to go over and stand for one little minute on a definite spot on the floor of Dave Storr's book store. It was upon that precise spot some 16 or 18 years ago that I experienced one of the most humbling moments of my entire life.

Nobody ever exactly pinned any medals on me for modesty, not up here in those days, at any rate, and although I didn't say much about it, I privately felt very sorry for the college when I was graduated. I thought maybe, by hard pulling, it might be able to get along after a modified fashion, but I was sure it was in for a hard time. There wasn't any question in my mind that my football fame was so secure it would practically become oppressive.

But now two or three years had passed, and I had a job on a Boston paper. They were setting my effusions in big black print, and now, so far as Dartmouth was concerned, I not only took for granted that I was an immortal alumnus, but also universally recognized as a tremendously important bellwether of daily journalism.

And I came up here in the middle of a football season, all done up in a 'coon coat and a cane, and strolled over to the book store to give Ira Leavitt, or anybody else fortunate enough to be present, the benefit of a little actual conversation with a certified, triple-riveted, sealed-in-the-cask big shot. I didn't know who else would be there, but Ira couldn't miss. He worked there.

So I was over, elegantly flipping the cinders from a new 10-center all over Mr. Storr's oiled proscenium, when practically the most ridiculous-looking freshman I ever saw, and that's talking about him, came timidly through the door and asked if I were Mr. Cunningham.

He was a buck-toothed, pumpkin-pussed honey with freckles that looked as if somebody'd blasted bran in his face with a blow gun. His ears looked like the handles on a loving cup. They stuck out like first basemen's mitts below one of those silly looking freshman caps. And, on top of it all, he stuttered.

But it seemed that he was a brand-new cub reporter for the college daily paper, and he finally managed to get his tongue and his tonsils untangled long enough to reveal that he'd been sent to get me to stand hitched for an interview. The subject of his quest was a pontification upon what I'd seen or knew about Dartmouth's coming football opponents.

Well, sir, I told him, he'd come to exactly the right place. I'd seen Harvard, Yale, Brown and the rest of 'em, and maybe you've seen a Japanese water lily start to expand. I knew the young man must be terribly awed and, to tell you the truth, Mr. Leavitt looked considerably impressed.

So I not only gave him a great outpouring of high class information I actually took his pad and his pencil and showed him how to set his story up, what points to stress, how to build his lead. In short, I was giving him the heavy professional business, mostly for the benefit of Mr. Leavitt, whose shining bald head was bent low in heavy looking.

Apparition Refuses to Fade

At last the job was finished, and I dismissed the young man with a magnanimous wave of a flipper and a benign and patronizing sort of think-nothing-of-it smile. But the apparition didn't dismiss. Instead, he stood there, stuttering and looking dumb, and he finally managed to articulate that he'd like to ask me some questions if I didn't mind.

"Why, certainly, my boy," I why-certainlyed him.

"Well," said he, "I want to find out something about you, sir, to put in the story. First, are you a college man?"

I looked at him hard to see if he were kidding. His puss was as flatly dumb as half a sliced apple and three times as innocent. I then swiftly looked outside to see if somebody'd sent him. Obviously, if incredibly, it was strictly on the level.

"Yes," I said, so completely flabbergasted that it sounded to me as if I had heard somebody else say it.

"What college did you go to?" this unbelievable specimen was getting out in slow pieces, making notes on his paper.

"Why, this one," I said, even more weakly than before.

"Did you ever play football?" was the next in his list, and then came the ultimate: "What do you do for a living?"

If you ever saw the deflation of a large, old-fashioned, country fair balloon, and know how it looks on the ground when all the gas has finally escaped, that was it. With four questions, this innocent, gander-eyed wastrel of the journalistic waves had whittled me down to the splinters beneath us.

I never actually saw a man die from laughing, but if anybody ever comes closer than Ira Leavitt did, I don't want to be there.

I came up here today to stand on that spot again, not to expel or expunge the memory of that kid, but to resurrect him. I don't know what his name was, nor where he ever went. But if all the score is added up, he's probably the greatest thing my college ever did for me.

Trim Down Thighs for Swim Season

By Ida Jean Kain

YOU may be normal weight and have a good figure and get away with it—until the swim suit season calls for thigh exposure. This portion of the figure seems to be the measurement most in evidence in a beach brevity and it is the one most affected by the lack of muscle tone.

Hop intoyour swim suit and check up on your thighs. A lovely measurement varies from 19 inches for the slight frame to 22 inches for the heavy frame. Or, if you want to go by the Hollywood standard, your thigh should measure three and one-half times the size of your wrist.

The tape should be circled about the largest part of the upper leg—slightly more than halfway from knee to hip. With normal weight and a perfect thigh measurement, you are not likely to have the disfiguring lumps and hollows that mean flabby musculature. But you can trust your eyes and conscience more implicitly than scales and tapes measure. If you haven't exercised, it's high time you took a few thigh beautifiers:

Spread Knees Apart.

Lie on your back on the floor with knees flexed and feet together on floor near hips. Very slowly and forcibly spread knees as far apart as possible, then bring together just as slowly. Concentrate on the outward movement, making the hip and thigh muscles work. This exercise is especially good for developing a smooth inner thighline. Repeat slowly ten times.

Rest for a minute, then go on to the next thigh streamliner: Lie on the back on the floor with legs straight in the air at right angles to trunk. Separate the legs in a wide Y, then cross, separate again, and cross over. Continue for five counts, rest, and do five more counts.

For an exercise and massage combination, try this: Lie on back on floor with knees flexed and feet on floor, one slightly ahead of the other. Now, clap the inner thighs together hard! Keep clapping until you are tired. That will help to give you a nicely tapered inner thighline.

To Smooth Thighs

To smooth the outer thighs, sit on the floor and lean back on left elbow. Have left leg straight down on floor but turned slightly outward to bring the soft pad of fat on the side into direct contact with the floor. Flex right knee with foot on floor close to hip. Have right hand on floor in back. Are you set? Then use left forearm, left foot, right foot and right hand as hoists and raise yourself off floor, then come down hard on the fat pad. Keep going for 20 counts, then repeat on other side.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Girl Must Choose Between Her Parents and the Man She Loves, as They Threaten to Disown Her if She Marries Him; She Asks 'What Is Best to Do?'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I have been going with a man who seems to be everything I had ever hoped for. We are very much in love and he has asked me to marry him. And while I have said "yes," there are obstacles ahead. We belong to different religious faiths and while his parents do not object to mine, my people say if I marry him they will disown me. They say I will have to give up my family and friends; that I will be as if I had no parents. Mother has been worried sick by the situation and I hate to see her in this condition, but I believe I have my own life to lead.

I cannot give up the man I love and neither can I reconcile myself to the prospect of breaking entirely with my family. The man is an officer in the Army, and if we marry, it means I will lead the typical "army wife's" life—going were my husband is sent. It isn't likely we would be living in Washington any length of time. My fiance expects to be ordered to a new post within two months and he wants to take me with him when he goes.

Can you help me decide what to do? Should I try to forget him—knowing I shall be miserable the rest of my life, if I do? Or should I marry him and hope that my family will some day forgive me? Your immediate advice will be greatly appreciated. Sincerely, B. D. P.

Parents' Bigoted Attitude Deserves Little Respect

DEAR B. D. P.: If your character and the man's character are of Grade-A quality; and if, in addition to being magically "in love" with each other, you also like each other—in the sense of being real friends in mind and spirit, with a boundless, warranted appreciation and respect for each other's individual virtues and social qualities—it seems to me you would be justified in getting married, even at the risk of incurring your family's lasting displeasure. I feel, indeed, that parents of mentality so rigid and limited that they would scorn as "untouchable" a potential son-in-law, for the sole reason that his religious faith differed from theirs, are unfit—intellectually, spiritually and temperamentally—to dictate the life-pattern of their offspring.

If your fiance were a "godless" man, a man without any religious belief or church affiliation, one might make some shred of allowance for your intensely sectarian parents' distrust of him. But it seems to me they are behaving in a way that is a discredit to any Christian denomination, in shrinking from him as from "a limb of Satan," when one remembers that the Christain creed, whatever its form, universally concedes the essential brotherhood of God-revering men, because universally acknowledging the Fatherhood of God: a Fatherhood which always has been authoritatively interpreted as taking no prejudicial account of any member of the human family because of his fortuitous social background. In their holier-than-thou-ism, it seems to me your parents are committing a sin-against-the-spirit which they would do well to ponder and repent.

It must be obvious by now that, in my opinion, your parents' bigotry does not constitute reasonable deterrent to the marriage. This is not to say, however, that one can guarantee you happiness in defying their will. It may be that you are yet too young (say, less than 23) to make a sound choice of life partner. Or it may be that the habit of filial obedience is so ingrained in your character that you could never be happy acting contrary to it—no matter how rich in compensatory rewards the revolt might be.

The fact that you need help in reaching a decision in this critical instance suggests that you haven't matured psychologically to the point where you can safely take the administration of your affairs into your own hands. Yet in the last analysis, you alone must assume responsibility for charting a future course from here on out—since you must bear, for weal or woe, the consequences of whatever final decision is acted upon. Should Woman Marry Man Nine Years Younger?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Do you think there is a chance for permanent happiness where a woman marries a man nine years her junior—when both have similar backgrounds, common interests, etc., and when the woman is unusually healthy and of young appearance for her age? Your discussion of this question will be greatly appreciated.
PUZZLED.

Many Ifs and 'Buts' Enter Into Recokning

DEAR PUZZLED: Given a woman of extraordinary magnetism, poise, intelligence and vitality (the sort of woman of whom Shakespeare wrote, "Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale her infinite variety"), and a man (nine years her junior) of really mature mind, who appreciated her for all that she was (and not for her so-called "sex appeal" alone); a man big enough in spirit, sure enough in purpose and strong enough in character to hold to a strictly monogamous course in marriage, once he had committed himself to the relationship; and a man who had squarely faced the fact of her nine years' seniority and finally dismissed it as an item of little consequence when weighed in the balance against the "plus" values of her incomparably congenial personality—given all this, I am sure they could make a permanently happy marriage. Such marriages have been made, between men and women theoretically handicapped by a similar age difference.

But if the woman has attracted the man, or thinks to hold him, by a strained and hypocritical affectation of youth, their bubble of happiness is bound to evaporate within five to ten years after the marriage has been made, I should think. M. H.

Teach Yourself To Play Guitar

A CAMPUS big shot is the boy with the guitar! Handsome left tackles take a back seat when he goes into action, plunking out a lively tune or accompanying the gang in a song.

Teaching yourself the guitar isn't difficult, with diagrams and directions. You don't even have to be able to read music to play peppy chord accompaniments.

On a piece of popular music you'll find above the melody lines tiny guitar diagrams, showing what chords to play.

Dots show where to place the fingers of your left hand to play the chord.

At the same time, your right hand, holding a pick, plucks these strings near the sound hole, also the strings

To turn your chord into a rhythmical accompaniment, play the first or bass note on the first beat of your measure of music. Then pluck the other strings together on the remaining beats.

Plastic Dispenser Saves Cream, Work

Plastic creations have stepped from the kitchen to the bathroom with a new aer-flo dispenser which dispenses toothpaste and shaving cream by the simple method of turning a tiny handle. This dispenser may be attached to a bathroom tile by household cement or by inserting two tiny screws. It has three holes for tooth brushes at the top, and a clamp at the bottom permits the average tube of toothpaste or shaving cream to be attached tightly at the end, with the tube's mount hanging down.

All you need do is take out the toothbrush or shaving brush, turn the handle that squeezes out the paste or cream onto the brush which is held at the nozzle of the tube and just the amount actually required is released. When the tube is empty, remove it from the clamp, and you will find it has been thoroughly squeezed dry.

This dispenser is on sale in department stores.

The Gentler Sex

Mrs. Wadd Takes Her Stand

CHARGES that Mrs. Henrietta DeGoofey, president of the Do Something About It League, is a Communist were made yesterday by Mrs. Wimple gate Wadd.

MRS. WADD

Mrs. Wadd, wealthy widow of the late nut cup tycoon, is heading a faction in the league that is opposing Mrs. DeGoofey's re-election as president. Candidate of the Wadd faction is Mrs. Buffington Blah, straw woman of Mrs. Wadd. Also in the race is Miss M. Maggie Mopface, candidate of the Association For Advancement.

Mrs. Wadd, who has been indisposed due to overwork in charity benefits, held a press conference yesterday in her Louis XV bedroom. Speaking from her Madame Pompadour bed she said:

"I have always known Mrs. DeGoofey was a radical. Now I am convinced she is nothing short of a Communist. Her present campaign against large luncheons and tea parties, time honored American institutions, prove it. Mrs. DeGoofey also charges that women are eating too much in their social life. Now that is a Communist trick! I suppose she wants to distribute the food among a lot of foreigners and worthless people out of work who undoubtedly could get jobs if they tried hard enough.

To Protect Rights Of Better Element

What is more, Mrs. DeGoofey's proposal to let taxis push up with limousines to collect party guests strikes at the very foundations of our society. I suppose she would have our best people stand out in the rain waiting for their cars while taxis pushed in and picked up nobodies. Now I am for liberty but not license."

"Would you transform the Do Something About It League into an anti-reform agency?" asked a reporter."

"No indeed," was the reply." I am as liberal as anybody. I am for reform—but the right kind of reform. My platform, or rather that of my candidate, Mrs. Blah, is based on true. 100 per cent Americanism. For instance, here are some of the things our group advocates:

"First, the return of the White House to its ancient dignity. Too many upstarts and ordinary people are getting in there. Guest lists must be made more exclusive and entertaining more formal. In fact we advocate the return of knee breeches crinoline and powdered wigs for all guests.

"Second, the better regulation of pedestrians. They are being given too many privileges and are running wild. As a result our chauffeurs cannot make any headway in downtown traffic and that is why so many of us are late at committee meetings. There should be set certain times of the day at which pedestrians would be allowed to cross streets, and the rest of the time they should stay where they belong—indoors.

Less Footwork On Garden Tours

"Third, the establishment of escalators in historic old houses and of miniature railways on old estates which are opened to the public. With such conveniences pilgrimages would not be so fatiguing to the women who go on them.

"Fourth, the provision of corsages for all women presiding at meetings or addressing the public in any way.

"Fifth, the use of old-fashioned rats in pompadours and the development of sheerer gun metal hose.

"Sixth, the curtailment of silver fox and mink production in this country to make these furs less common. As it is, everybody is wearing them and many of our leading women have had to put theirs in storage."

"How will you carry out these reforms, Mrs. Wadd?" asked a veteran "leg" man.

"It will be comparatively easy. We will simply appoint committees to look after everything."

"Will Mrs. Blah make any speeches," was the reply. "But, pundit.

"Mrs. Blah NEVER makes speeches" was the reply. "But, if you will come to our tea and cocktail rally next Wednesday afternoon she will be glad to shake hands with you."

White House Garden Fete Draws Hundreds

By Hope Ridings Miller

THE FIRST White House garden party of the season was held yesterday afternoon when Mrs. Roosevelt received several hundred guests at tea time. The fete was not an annual function—such as the one will be tomorrow, when the First Lady is hostess to women officials in Government departments—but it drew a number of Washingtonians who have left cards at the White House this year.

Although tomorrow's party, set for 4:30 p. m., is planned as an al fresco affair, it will be brought indoors if the weather is not suitable for a lawn fete. Several hundred women have been invited.

Back at the White House after an absence of several weeks, Mrs. Roosevelt faces an unusually crowded schedule for the remainder of this month. She got into swing yesterday with a calendar that was jammed with appointments. Following her press conference in the morning, she was entertained at the Capitol by the Senate Ladies Luncheon Club. At 3:30 p. m. she received members of the D. C. Library Association who went to the White House to see some of the books recently presented to the President.

Picnic Planned For Senate Wives

Mrs. Roosevelt and the ladies of the Cabinet will entertain the Senate wives at the annual spring picnic lunch today at the White House. This evening, the First Lady will attend the concert of the American Youth orchestra at Constitution Hall.

A luncheon with the members of the Seventy-sixth Congressional Club is on Mrs. Roosevelt's calendar for tomorrow. The party will take place at the Wardman Park Hotel, and later, the First Lady will view the water color exhibit of the Public Works Agency. At 4 p. m. she will be back at the White House to receive Senora de Ruiz-Guinazu, wife of the Argentine Foreign Minister, and their daughters. Half an hour later, she and several Cabinet hostesses will be in line on the White House lawn (weather permitting) to top-ranking women from the Government departments.

Edward Bruce, of the Commission of Fine Arts, will be Mrs. Roosevelt's luncheon host at the Interior Department on Friday, when she will view sculptures submitted in a recent contest. Later that afternoon she will attend the Pan-American Fiesta of the Women's Democratic Club and, at 5 p. m., she will attend the tea of the Mount Vernon Ladies Association. The presentation of the annual Chi Omega award will take place at the White House Friday evening.

Will Attend League Horse Show

Mrs. Roosevelt will be at Meadowbrook Saturday morning to see part of the children's program in connection with the Junior League horse show (which, incidentally, opens Friday and continues through Sunday). Also on Saturday she will receive members of the senior class of the Arthurdale (Va.) School and, at 3:30 p. m., 60 Girl Scouts from Maryland. At 3:20, she will greet members of the chorus of the New York Institute for the Blind and will listen to a brief program of songs, and from 4 to 5 o'clock she will entertain the Democratic Women's National Council at tea. Her next press conference is scheduled for Monday, May 19.

Argentine Visitors Feted

Three daughters of the Argentine Foreign Minister and Senora de Ruiz Guinazu, Senoritas Celina, Maria Luisa and Carmen, were honor guests at a dinner given last night by Mrs. Randall Hagner, jr. The latter is the daughter of Senora de Espil, wife of the Argentine Ambassador.

Invited to meet the trio were several members of the young married set. The party was held at the Chevy Chase Club.

The guests were the Assistant Naval Attache of the French Embassy and the Marquise Levis-Mirepoix, the Second Secretary of the Argentine Embassy and Senora de Scilingo, the other Second Secretary, Jorge Escalante; the Second Secretary of the Brazilian Embassy and Senhora Gouthier, Miss Betty van der Straten-Ponthoz, Mr. and Mrs. George Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey Kauffmann, Mr. and Mrs. F. Moran McConihe, Countess de Baillet Latour, Mrs. Eugene Carusi, Mr. and Mrs. A. Y. P. Garnett, jr., Douglas Norman and Alex Hagner, brother of the host.

Prince Felix Tours Va. Countryside In Search of Farm

A distinguished visitor house hunting in Virginia this week is Prince Consort Felix, husband of Grand Duchess Charlotte of Luxembourg. The prince is reported to be looking for a farm. He is staying with Mrs. William Corcoran Eustis at Oatlands and Harry Frost has been driving him around the countryside. The grand duchess and her husband visited Virginia earlier this month on the annual garden tour.

The hunt country is teeming with well knowns this week. Count Haugwitz von Reventlow, former husband of Barbara Hutton, has been staying at the Red Fox Tavern. Also there are Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Firestone, of Akron, Ohio; Mrs. Arthur Brisbane, who came from New York to see her daughter, Alice, ride in the Foxhall School horse show on Monday; Dwight Wiman, the producer, and Mrs. Wiman, and Mrs. Plunkett Stewart, of Philadelphia. Mr. and Mrs. Stewart entertained Lord and Lady Halifax at a foxhunting weekend several weeks ago.

Tea Is Given For Mrs. Blanding By Mrs. Wideman

Mrs. Frank Wideman entertained at a tea yesterday for Mrs. Albert Blanding, wife of Gen. Blanding. The guest of honor has been visiting Senator and Mrs. Charles Andrews, of Florida, where the general is stationed, and is now staying with Mrs. Wideman.

About 20 of Mrs. Blanding's friends dropped in during the afternoon. Among those who called were Senator and Mrs. Andrews, Senator and Mrs. Claude Pepper and Mr. and Mrs. William Blanding, son and daughter-in-law of the honor guest. The hostess wore a black street length dress with white trimming at the neck.

About the Town

with Dudley Harmon

JUST ARRIVED in Washington after traveling to Lisbon through eight European countries is Philon Philon, new member of the Greek Legation staff. (He says he, too, is sometimes confused by his name and in America hopes to be called "Phil" Philon.)

Mr. Philon's uncle is the treasurer of King George of Greece and probably went to Crete with the King, though his nephew hasn't heard from him. M. and Mrs. Philon left Greece just before the German invasion. The diplomat says that everybody in Athens knew exactly what would be the fate of their country, but were stoically determined to put up a brave fight "because it was our duty."

THE PHILONS had to go through Germany to get to Lisbon and left that country three days before the Nazi march on Greece. En route to Belgrade their train passed the one which was carrying Prince Paul of Yugoslavia to an "unknown destination." They spent several days in Vienna, which M. Philon says is as much a boom town as Washington, except that "nobody smiles." Thousands of residents of West Germany were pouring into Vienna to seek refuge from British bombing attacks. "It's almost impossible to get a room in a hotel," says M. Philon in his excellent English.

In Vienna the diplomat saw gangs of British and French prisoners working on air raid shelters at the railroad station. From what used to be Austria the couple went on to Marseille, where Mme. Philon did some shopping. Among her purchases was a leather handbag, for which she had to pay around $40. Railroad service in France, says M. Philon, is the most disorganized of any country. The trains are not only overcrowded, but old and dirty, as the Germans have taken most of the new equipment away.

M. PHILON describes the Athenians as not only firmly resolved when he left, but in "high spirits." He says that the occupation of their country, terrible as it is, was almost worth the wonderful feeling of unity which the Greeks are experiencing.

The diplomat is full of praise for the work which the women of the American Legation did for war relief. They met every day to roll bandages and study nursing. The American Minister, Lincoln MacVeagh, knows the Greeks and even Greek, but M. Philon says that even he was amazed by the extraordinary morale.

Since the German invasion, the Greek Legation in Washington has been cut off from all communication with the homeland. The Minister gets his news by cable from Crete.

M. Philon's previous posts include London, Paris and Germany.

COUNTESS DE GRAMONT, whose husband is with the Free French forces in London, will spend a strictly American summer. She has obtained a job as counselor and French teacher in the Gunston Hall camp in New York State. Her children will go with her.

Mariette de Gramont and Mme. Jean Baube, wife of the Havas correspondent, are delighted with the way their new personal service business is going. They recently opened an office to do practically any errand you want. Their latest job was to find and furnish an apartment for a bachelor who had just come to town and whom they had never seen.

MARK THIS down as the gayest week socially of the entire season. Every day is jammed with luncheons, cocktail parties and dinners, many in honor of the Argentine Foreign Minister. One host who wanted to give a dinner had to call 36 people before he could muster 12.

Latin American Affair Deferred

On behalf of the Ambassadors, Ministers and Charges d'Affaires of the Republics of Latin America, the following announcement has been made with reference to the reception planned for tonight:

"The Ambassadors, Ministers and Charges d'Affaires of the Republics of Latin America, having learned of the President's indisposition and wishing to avoid the possibility of further strain upon him, have suggested that the reception arranged for Wednesday evening, May 14, be postponed until such time as the President may feel better able to do them the honor of accepting their invitation. This suggestion having been accepted by the President, the reception has accordingly been deferred."

Chinese Party Given to Honor Mrs. Morrow

A real Chinese party, with China tea, almond cakes and spicy preserved fruit, was that given yesterday by Mrs. John Guider for Mrs. Dwight Morrow. The latter spoke on Ginling College in China, the sister school of Smith College, of which Mrs. Morrow was acting president last year. Ginling is celebrating its twenty-fifth anniversary and is carrying on its work though it has had to move 1,500 miles into the interior to escape the Japanese.

After tea had been served, guests gathered in the drawing room of the Guider home on Kalorama Circle to hear Mrs. Morrow tell the dramatic story of Ginling's work. The students have trekked 1,500 miles, carrying their instruments and other equipment in order to continue their education under tragic conditions.

The Chinese Ambassador, Dr. Hu-Shih, was welcomed by Mrs. Guider, who wore a pink crepe frock. Among the other guest were Mrs. William O. Douglas, Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, Mrs. Felix Frankfurter, Mme. de Kauffmann, wife of the Danish Minister—she attended Smith; Mrs. Emory S. Land, Mrs. Dean Acheson and Mrs. Archibald MacLeish.

Also present was Mrs. Nelson Johnson, whose husband, now Minister to Australia, was formerly Ambassador to China. She and Mrs. Morrow lunched together yesterday.

At the tea table, which was centered with Chinese lilies, were Mrs. William Chapin Huntington; Mrs. Vernon Brewster, president of the local Smith College Club; Mrs. William MacDougall, Mrs. Howard Wilkinson, Mrs. Clayton Haskell, Mrs. R. M. Kauffmann, Mr. Ernest Griffith and Mrs. Ray Bowker. In charge of arrangements for the party were Mrs. Keith Kane, Mrs. Harold Hoskins and Mrs. George Eddy.

Miss Rose Dawes, R. A. Walke, Jr., Will Wed in June

Capt. Robert Alden Dawes, U. S. N., retired, and Mrs. Dawes, of Winchester, Mass., announce the engagement of their daughter, Rose Anderson Dawes, to Roger Atkinson Walke, jr.

The bride-elect is a graduate of Holton-Arms School. Mr. Walke, the son of the Rev. and Mrs. Roger Atkinson Walke of St. Mark's-on-the-Hill, Pikesville, Md., is a graduate of Princeton University.

Plans are being made for a wedding in June. Only relatives will attend.

Southwest Settlement House Plans Studied

By Jessie Ash Arndt
The Post Club Editor

Plans for a new Southwest Settlement House to replace the converted saloon that has served for the last several years, were discussed yesterday at a meeting of the Southwest Community Building Fund Committee at the home of Mrs. Eugene Meyer.

William Dewey Foster, architect of the War Department Building, presented before the committee and explained the plans for the proposed Southwest House, drawn by Hilyard Robinson, widely known colored architect who designed the Langston development in Northeast Washington under the Alley Dwelling Authority.

The new building would provide adequate space and facilities for the steadily increasing work of the settlement, he said. The present one, in addition to being so old and dilapidated that even the plaster rattles when trains pass on the nearby viaduct, has no ground adjoining for use as a playground, the committee members were told. Because of this, the police once a week rope off the street in front to provide a temporary play area for the neighborhood children.

Miss Margaret Merrill, head resident of Barney Neighborhood House, which serves the white population in the same area, pointed out that the settlement house is more than an agency. It establishes a way of life and sets a standard of decent living in the community, she said. It deals with the families always as neighbors and friends instead of regarding them as "cases" indexed and catalogued. It does a 24-hour job daily, seven days a week, she said, and often cuts yards of red tape that would otherwise complicate the solution of their problems.

As an illustration of the kind of work accomplished through the settlement, she said that 11 years ago children were brought to the nursery of Southwest House sewed in their clothes for the winter. Now both parents and children have learned the advantage of taking off their clothes at night and getting into bed between clean sheets.

Lessons in health, sanitation, handicraft and opportunity for recreation compensate in some small measure, said Miss Merrill, for the poor housing, lack of sanitation and meager opportunity of the low-income group served by the settlement.

During the first six months of 1938 Southwest House had an attendance of 3,965 boys and 3,024 girls, she said. For the same period in 1940, the number had increased to 6,139 boys and 4,559 girls. The number of adults had increased from 482 to 629. This indicates, in a neighborhood of fairly stable population, the rapidly growing demand for the services of the settlement, Miss Merrill pointed out.

Mrs. William Adams Slade, speaking generally on the influence of settlement work, compared the needs of the colored population in Washington, many of whom come to the city as strangers, to those of the foreign population of New York among whom she worked years ago. They need the advice and help they can get at a settlement house, she said, as well as opportunities for finding wholesome associations and recreation. It is a vital factor in preventing juvenile delinquency, Mrs. Slade declared. Often musical and other talent is discovered in the children and developed also, she said.

Mrs. Albert W. Atwood, chairman of the fund committee, opened the meeting, and Edward Lewis, of the Community Chest, presided. Mr. Lewis warned that, in the midst of defense preparations, the home front must not be neglected. "One bruised man at home requires as much attention as a wounded man abroad," he asserted.

Among those present at the meeting were Mrs. John Lord O'Brian, Mrs. Hennen Jennings, Dr. Albert J. McCartney, of the Covenant - First Presbyterian Church; Robert Lincoln O'Brien, the former Minister to Czecho-Slovakia, and Mrs. Wilbur Carr, Mrs. William Hurd Hill, Mrs. Bancroft Davis and Mrs. Charles J. Brand.

It also includes a list of plants, many of which were brought to Virginia by the first colonists and may be found in the Mount Vernon gardens today.

center spread being a reproduction of a plan of Mount Vernon by Samuel Vaughan, drawn in 1787, when he was a guest of Gen. Washington. The brochure quotes a portion of Gen. Washington's diary, written in the spring of 1785. It also includes a list of the books on agriculture and gardening which were in the Mount Vernon Library during Washington's lifetime.

In bloom now are candy tuft, petunias, collumbine and lilies of the valley. Other white flowers will follow in a chaste parade as the summer advances, including everything white that blooms in this section except roses. Only in the window boxes at the side of the house are flowers of color.

Introduced by the branch president, Mrs. Reuben G. There is no time to waste, she said, in meeting the social needs of the country, and declared the women were essentially equipped to promote such welfare work through their organizations. She urged that they go forward courageously in helping to solve the problems of their communities.

William R. Blumenthal, national director of the home, also was a guest of honor at the luncheon and told of the institution's growth. The Washington branch is one of 35 in various parts of the country which help support the home.

Mrs. Samakow presented to Mrs. Charles Goldsmith, chairman of the Center Camp committee, a substantial check from the branch, to be used for the summer camp.

Highways of the Future:

Whitehurst Calls Painted Safety Zones Death Traps and Urges Pedestrian Islands

Also Proposes Cut In Number of Bus And Streetcar Stops

By Howard F. Wentworth
Post Staff Writer

Although concerning itself primarily with street changes designed to facilitate the movement of traffic, the highway planning survey report of Capt. H. C Whitehurst, director of highways, has not overlooked the important matter of increased safety to all street users.

In his recommendations to the Commissioners, Whitehurst condemned as "death traps" the present type of painted "safety" zones and urged their replacement with "an approved type of platform regardless of who pays the bill."

Under an Act of Congress, District authorities are not now permitted to construct or renovate safety zones unless the work is connected with a street paving or widening project.

Favors Fewer Stops

The zones, many of them merely yellow painted lines with "button" corners, are established and maintained by the Capital Transit Co., and are located according to street car or bus stops.

The District does, however, provide painted zones for pedestrian protection at crosswalks. Whitehurst commented:

"These death traps should be replaced in the immediate future even at the sacrifice of other work. The number of street car loading points or stops should be reduced to a minimum consistent with proper service.

"Generally speaking," he added, "there are too many stops for both buses and street cars to permit expeditious mass transportation service."

To safeguard pedestrian traffic, Whitehurst advocated construction of pedestrian "islands" at intersections on all arterial highways or boulevards with a roadway width of 60 feet or more.

Additional Traffic Lanes

Further, the report urged revamping of all irregular intersections—street crossings where the width or design presents a hazard to pedestrians—to provide for concrete "islands" forming separate channels for motor traffic.

Whitehurst pointed out that work of this type has in the past shown that dangerous conditions can be eliminated and a safe flow can be provided for both motorists and pedestrians.

In outlying sections where the bulk of everyday foot traffic is composed of women and children, the Whitehurst report proposes a program of widening main highways through community commercial areas.

This, said Whitehurst, would provide an additional traffic lane in each direction wherever street widths permit and would offer pedestrion protection by reducing vehicle congestion.

In order to prevent unnecessary widening of certain streets, Whitehurst suggested widespread extension of the city's one-way street system. He urged that a study of this matter be undertaken immediately.

Red Cross Plans Aid To Brazil Flood Area

Drought Perils New England, Ohio Valley

By the Associated Press

Marked shortages in water storage in the Ohio Valley and New England, especially in reservoirs used for power and industrial purposes, was reported yesterday by the Geological Survey, due to prolonged lack of rainfall.

"Unless there are very unusually heavy rains," the report said, "in New England and parts of the Ohio River Valley, ground water conditions may easily become critical."

The survey added:

"Throughout New England and Maine the situation with respect to storage is generally unfavorable. As is customary, many of the reservoirs were drawn down during the late winter period to make room for the usual spring floods and freshets. On account of continued deficiencies in spring rainfall—in many instances the lowest on record—spring freshets have not occurred, reservoirs have failed to fill, and many are in a badly depleted condition."

Turning to the Ohio Valley, the report summarized:

"In Indiana and Ohio, the streamflow continued much below normal. The flow of west fork of White River near Noblesville, Ind., was only 16 per cent of normal, less than one-half the minimum April discharge for the previous 25 years. Some shallow water table wells in Indiana were above their low stages of the fall of 1940 but still average 3½ feet below the April average of record.

"In the Ohio Valley, near Cincinnati, and parts of the Tennessee River Basin little, if any, usual spring recharge occurred. Storage for industrial purposes in the Mahoning Valley is below normal."

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

G. A. O. to Bring 3,000 Under Civil Service

General Accounting Office is prepared to bring 3,000 of its emergency employes under Civil Service on July 1. Highly important to G. A. O. employes is the fact that they won't be brought under merit through the Ramspeck Act, but through normal Civil Service procedure which will give them a far better chance to win full Civil Service status. It's a fact that the commission has already made arrangements to bring the 3,000 employes under merit. G. A. O. was given funds in its regular appropriation bill to pay the salaries of approximately 3,000 of the 3,200 workers who are paid by emergency funds. This will place their jobs under Civil Service automatically.

The commission will give G. A. O. employes 90 days after July 1 to qualify. During that period the employes must be fingerprinted, fill out Form 375, be given medical tests, get their legal residences determined and some will be given noncompetitive mental exams. To be eligible for Civil Service, temporary employes must have served for at least six months by July 1.

G. A. O. employes can be given more than one chance to pass noncompetitive mental tests. They can flunk up to three mental tests and still retain their present jobs under present rules. It's said that auditors, accountants, claims examiners and all personnel above them won't be given mental tests, but instead, will be graded on their records. A few emergency employes will be retained after July 1 and G. A. O. probably will ask for funds to hire several hundred additional, in the 1942 relief bill.

G. H. A. Votes on Dues

Group Health Association members are voting on a plan to adjust dues. It's proposed that dues for a single person be lowered from $2.20 to $2 a month. A man and his wife would continue to pay $4, but it's proposed to add $1 a month for each child in the family. The present rate is $5 for a family regardless of the number of children . . . A Federal Works report shows that USHA has built 90 per cent of the completed defense homes. Only 4,191 defense units are available for occupancy and USHA has built 3,747 of them. Eight different agencies are engaged in building defense homes.

Harry Holland, assistant personnel director of the War Department, is suffering from a physical breakdown from the heavy work load . . . OPM officials have complained about a guard on duty at its building. It seems that the guard tried to arrest a newspaperman for talking with a person who had been picketing the place . . . OPM has decided that it won't ask for the draft deferment of any man on its staff . . . OPM is in a dither over field offices. Production, priorities, labor, defense contracts, State and local among other devisions have or will set up field offices and none of them wants to share office space with the others . . . James LeCron, campaign manager for Vice President Wallace, has been appointed chief of the distribution division of Surplus Marketing Administration. Jonathan Garst, present chief, will return to San Francisco to head the regional office there.

Civil Service Commission will waive age restrictions for the 600,000 persons on its Interdepartmental Placement List, William C. Hull, executive assistant, has informed the UFWA. No person, however, who is past the retirement age may qualify for a Federal job . . . Civil Service tests: Fishery marketing specialist, $2,000 to $4,600, Fish and Wildlife Service; specialist in agriculture vocational education, $3,800, Office of Education.

President Roosevelt probably will announce a plan soon to cut expenditures of nondefense agencies. Understood to be under study is a plan whereby the Budget Bureau will review Congressional appropriations and recommend cuts to the President. If approved, the Budget Bureau will simply withhold the money and prevent the agencies from spending it. Agencies that are likely to feel the Budget Bureau knife are CCC, NYA, Agriculture and WPA. The President has frequently used this process to save funds. Last year nearly $100,000,000 was saved by the Budget Bureau withholding funds of reorganized agencies and others. Very little will be saved during the 1941 fiscal year that ends next month. Nearly every agency has had its work increased by the defense program.

String Quartet and Pianist Give Recital at Cosmos Club

Chamber Music Guild presents its string quartet (Frank Gittelson, Alexander Levin, Benjamin Sosner and Marcel Ancher) and Irene Jacobi, pianist, on Tuesday night in the Cosmos Club assembly hall. Program: Negro Quartettino (Harl McDonald), Hagiographa for piano and string quartet (Frederick Jacobi).

Frank Gittelson and his colleagues in the Chamber Music Guild String Quartet made their seventh concert of the season memorable by devoting it to two living American composers, Harl McDonald and Frederick Jacobi. Moreover, neither of the works performed had been heard here before, a fact which doubled one's appreciation of their enterprise. Musicians who take the trouble to prepare a new work for introduction to the public deserve commendation not only for the extra time involved (it is so much easier to play a work they know practically by heart), but also for their interest in extending the general knowledg of musical literature.

BROWN

Harl McDonald's Negro Quartettino would seem to be one of his early compositions, inasmuch as it does not show the vitality and the creative force manifest in his music of the last few years. The title is justified more by the atmosphere of the music than by the use of recognizable Negro themes, although the first movement, Andante Lamentoso, has some phrases borrowed from spirituals. This is the strongest movement in a work which as a whole is wanting in vigorous affirmation. The Andante Patetico has some poetic moments of emotional urgency and the closing Allegro is enlivened by humor. Pizzacato passages weaken the Allegro, however, particularly in the ineffective final measures. When will composers realize that pizzicato, a technical trick, should be used sparingly in ensemble writing?

Irene Jacobi came from New York to play the piano part in her husband's quintet and received merited applause for her artistic excellence therein. Her authoritative reading was not only an assistance to her associates in matters of phrasing but also invaluable in the disclosure of the meaning of the music. Hagiographa is one of Mr. Jacobi's finest chamber music works, compact in substance, rich in harmonic texture and admirably written for the instruments.

The Hagiographa quintet is subtitled: Three Biblical Narratives—Job, Ruth and Joshua. Hagiographa is the Greek name for the last division of the Hebrew Scriptures, comprising all the books not contained in the Law and the Prophets. Job and Ruth fall into this category, but Mr. Jacobi took poetic license when he included Joshua in the group.

The characterization achieved in the music is subtle and exceedingly effective. One's imagination is stimulated by the strong subjectiveness of the music which expresses the unshakable integrity of Job under his afflictions, the nostalgia of Ruth "amid the alien corn" and the impetuous masterfulness of Joshua, the son of Nun, "who was full of the spirit of wisdom."

Miss Edmonston, Teacher, Ends Life In North Carolina

Miss Martha Edmonston, 37, daughter of David B. Edmonston, 1441 Fairmont Street Northwest, was found dead after having inhaled carbon monoxide gas in a parked automobile in the woods near Wilson, N. C., yesterday.

Miss Edmonston, dean of the department of languages at Atlantic Christian College in Wilson, was said by the coroner to have taken her own life, according to the Associated Press.

A note found scribbled on a sheet of notebook paper said, "No flowers, please." The body was found by a searching party sent out when Miss Edmonston failed to appear for a class.

She was born in Columbus, Ohio, and attended the public schools here. She attended George Washington University, receiving an M. A. degree from that institution before starting her teaching career at Atlantic Christian College.

Clear Weather Forecast Hits Md. Farmers

Clear weather today and through the remainder of the week, forecast by the Weather Bureau last night, can't clear the frowns on the faces of Maryland farmers and Potomac boatmen.

Maryland farmlands need rain and sailors need higher tides.

The Weather Bureau couldn't give any reason for the rainfall deficiency which is general throughout the country and is 5.44 inches below average precipitation for this area since the beginning of the year. Tides recorded at 1.9 feet below mean low water are caused by a full moon and several days of constant northwest winds, rivermen said.

In a five-day forecast issued yesterday the Weather Bureau promised little alleviation. Temperatures below normal today will rise to about normal near the end of the week, it was said. Scattered showers forecast for this weekend over the northern Atlantic States may help the crops.

Drought was threatened in Virginia before last weekend's showers, county agricultural agents said. Unusually low temperatures for May have offset the April hot spell, placing Virginia crops at about their usual spring stage.

The low temperatures also have placed Maryland crops, which had been about two weeks ahead of schedule, back to their normal stage for this season.

Typical of the low temperatures for May was the mercury in Washington yesterday which ranged between 42 at 6 a. m. and 68 at 3:10 p. m.

Low tides, which are bad for fishing and destructive to boats, are gradually rising, the rivermen say, and are expected to be back to normal by this weekend.

Bids in on First Of Office Buildings

McCloskey and Co., Philadelphia contractors, yesterday submitted to the Public Buildings Administration a low bid of $499,777 for construction of a temporary Government office building at Fourth Street and Independence Avenue Southwest.

The proposed two-story frame structure is the first of six authorized by Congress for national defense work. It has not yet been decided what offices will be placed in the structure.

Second lowest bidder was W. F. O'Neil & Co., of Chicago, and third was the Harwood-Nebel Co., of Washington.

Higher Gas, Realty Taxes Seen for D. C.

Influential Senators Rally Behind Overton In His Insistence For $10,000,000

Higher realty and gasoline taxes and a Federal payment not to exceed the present $6,000,000—that was the picture of the District's fiscal prospects painted by House leaders last night in a post-mortem of the Overton formula.

On the other side of the Capitol, however, the picture was brighter as influential members of the Senate rallied behind Senator John H. Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, in his insistence on a $10,000,000 minimum Federal payment to help the District meet the additional cost of government resulting from the defense emergency.

Chairman Robert R. Reynolds of the Senate District Committee declared the District "entitled to relief and assistance" and said he would support Senator Overton "because he is a friend of the District." Reynolds' stand was backed by Senators Pat McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, and Arthur Capper (Republican), of Kansas, ranking minority member of the District Committee.

House in No Mood to Agree

While declining to be quoted by name in advance of consideration of the District supply bill by the House District appropriations subcommittee, leaders freely admitted that the House, at present at least, is in no mood to agree to a Federal payment in excess of the $6,000,000 voted for the fiscal year expiring June 30.

"If they would bring in bills to increase the real estate tax from $1.75 to 2.50 and the gasoline tax from 2 to 4 cents a gallon the measures would be passed in five minutes," one member said.

Bills for a $2.50 realty and a four-cent gas tax are now before the District Committee. They were introduced by Representatives Edward H. Rees, of Kansas, and Raymond S. Springer, of Indiana, both Republicans.

Meanwhile, Representative George H. Mahon (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the House District appropriations subcommittee, declared that hearings on the District appropriations bill would start as soon as supply bills for the Federal departments have been cleared. Mahon said he was unable, at present, to name a starting date.

With a $4,000,000 spread in Senate and House views of the size of the Federal payment, the stage was set for a fiscal deadlock between the two houses reminiscent of a fight two years ago when the District Government was without operating funds for five days past the end of the fiscal year.

"A Terrible Mistake"

"Some day the two committees of Congress should sit down together and work out a fiscal plan in justice and fair play to the District," declared Senator McCarran. He stated that the Overton bill, "while a step in the right direction, doesn't go far enough in providing funds for the District."

"The Capital city is a Federal project and should be maintained on that basis," McCarran added.

The Nevadan called House defeat of the Overton bill "a terrible mistake," while Senator Capper, assuming that the House "acted in perfect good faith," declared he was "surprised and sorry to see" the formula killed.

Capper said he considered Overton's proposal for a $10,000,000 payment "a reasonable suggestion."

The fiscal formula proposed by the Overton bill would make the Federal payment equal to the ratio of United States land to the entire area of the District. Applied to the 1942 general fund estimates, it would produce a $9,300,000 payment.

D. C. Ballet Dancer Makes Professional Debut at Center

Miss Zalipskaya, who lived here 14 years and received much of her training from Russian teachers here, made her homecoming appearance after recent tours with the Mordkin Ballet and after a formal dance recital in New York Sunday night.

Last night's audience glimpsed her first in a series of classic dances with Leon Varkas—dances from "Les Sylphides" by Chopin, with choreography by Mikhail Fokine. In frothy white tulle ballet skirt, at times she was like thistledown floating across the stage.

Her mother, Mme. Marie Zalipsky, former prima donna in Petrograd, played the piano accompainment for the dances, with Milton Schwartz of the National Symphony Orchestra playing the violin obligato.

A group of other young dancers from the Mordkin Ballet also took part in the program. Elizabeth Townsend, niece of Pulitzer Prize winning playwright Robert Sherwood, appeared in the Viennese scene with others of the group. Ruth Terrel-Macy gave an Oriental character dance and a Spanish dance. Sari, blond dancer who uses only the one name, admitted backstage that for all its Oriental sound she is from Alanta, Ga.

Three Prisoners Cleared as Simon Slaying Suspects

Three colored men held in connection with several recent street robberies yesterday were rejected by police as possible suspects in the murder of Dr. Heinrich S. Simon, 61, German music master.

The three suspects, one of them held for murder, have confessed to numerous recent strong-arm cases and one even said he murdered Mrs. Rose Abramowitz. Police, however, discounted the men's stories and investigation proved their whereabouts the night Dr. Simon was slain.

A line-up before recent robbery victims was held at Police Headquarters last night.

Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, chief of detectives, said his men had uncovered no new clews in the Simon case, but added that the investigation "is still young."

"I believe that this case will be broken," he asserted. "Just give us a little time."

Highways of the Future:

Whitehurst Calls Painted Safety Zones Death Traps and Urges Pedestrian Islands

Also Proposes Cut In Number of Bus And Streetcar Stops

By Howard F. Wentworth
Post Staff Writer

Although concerning itself primarily with street changes designed to facilitate the movement of traffic, the highway planning survey report of Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, has not overlooked the important matter of increased safety to all street users.

In his recommendations to the Commissioners, Whitehurst condemned as "death traps" the present type of painted "safety" zones and urged their replacement with "an approved type of platform regardless of who pays the bill."

Under an Act of Congress, District authorities are not now permitted to construct or renovate safety zones unless the work is connected with a street paving or widening project.

Favors Fewer Stops

The zones, many of them merely yellow painted lines with "button" corners, are established and maintained by the Capital Transit Co., and are located according to street car or bus stops.

The District does, however, provide painted zones for pedestrian protection at crosswalks. Whitehurst commented:

"These death traps should be replaced in the immediate future even at the sacrifice of other work. The number of street car loading points or stops should be reduced to a minimum consistent with proper service.

"Generally speaking," he added, "there are too many stops for both buses and street cars to permit expeditious mass transportation service."

To safeguard pedestrian traffic, Whitehurst advocated construction of pedestrian "islands" at intersections on all arterial highways or boulevards with a roadway width of 60 feet or more.

Additional Traffic Lanes

Further, the report urged revamping of all irregular intersections—street crossings where the width or design presents a hazard to pedestrians—to provide for concrete "islands" forming separate channels for motor traffic.

Whitehurst pointed out that work of this type has in the past shown that dangerous conditions can be eliminated and a safe flow can be provided for both motorists and pedestrians.

In outlying sections where the bulk of everyday foot traffic is composed of women and children, the Whitehurst report proposes a program of widening main highways through community commercial areas.

This, said Whitehurst, would provide an additional traffic lane in each direction wherever street widths permit and would offer pedestrion protection by reducing vehicle congestion.

In order to prevent unnecessary widening of certain streets, Whitehurst suggested widespread extension of the city's one-way street system. He urged that a study of this matter be undertaken immediately.

Red Cross Plans Aid To Brazil Flood Area

Threat of epidemics in the flood-stricken areas around Porto Alegre, Brazil, where the rising Guaiba River has forced 50,000 persons from their homes, yesterday prompted the American Red Cross to make plans for the immediate shipment by air of $5,000 worth of serums.

In addition, the Red Cross yesterday cabled its sister society in Brazil $5,000 cash to help emergency work among the homeless.

Drought Perils New England, Ohio Valley

By the Associated Press

Marked shortages in water storage in the Ohio Valley and New England, especially in reservoirs used for power and industrial purposes, was reported yesterday by the Geological Survey, due to prolonged lack of rainfall.

"Unless there are very unusually heavy rains," the report said, "in New England and parts of the Ohio River Valley, ground water conditions may easily become critical."

The survey added:

"Throughout New England and Maine the situation with respect to storage is generally unfavorable. As is customary, many of the reservoirs were drawn down during the late winter period to make room for the usual spring floods and freshets. On account of continued deficiencies in spring rainfall—in many instances the lowest on record—spring freshets have not occurred, reservoirs have failed to fill, and many are in a badly depleted condition."

Turning to the Ohio Valley, the report summarized:

"In Indiana and Ohio, the streamflow continued much below normal. The flow of west fork of White River near Noblesville, Ind., was only 16 per cent of normal, less than one-half the minimum April discharge for the previous 25 years. Some shallow water table wells in Indiana were above their low stages of the fall of 1940 but still average 3½ feet below the April average of record.

"In the Ohio Valley, near Cincinnati, and parts of the Tennessee River Basin little, if any, usual spring recharge occurred. Storage for industrial purposes in the Mahoning Valley is below normal."

Thomas Circle Citizens Reelect Ella M. Thompson

Other officers named at a meeting held at Mrs. Thompson's home, 1120 Rhode Island Avenue Northwest, were W. E. Baker, vice president; Kenneth C. Robbins, secretary, and F. M. Thompson, treasurer.

After much discussion, the association referred to a special committee a resolution approving the proposed establishment of a nine-man recreational board for the District.

A resolution to join the Municipal Assembly was tabled.

Indorsement was given to the Midcity Citizens Association's drive for more playgrounds in the downtown area. Fourteenth and Upshur Streets Northwest was approved as the site for the new Abbott Vocational School.

Roosevelt Signs Bill for Heating District Buildings

A bill authorizing the Commissioners to purchase steam from the central heating plant on Maine Avenue Southwest for use at the District Building, new Recorder of Deeds Building and Public Library was signed by the President yesterday.

In municipal structures where there is no individual heating plant, it was explained, the Commissioners must request special legislation to pipe steam from the central supply.

Mrs. Egan Heads Retreat League

Mrs. Joseph Egan, of St. Gabriel's parish, was elected president of the Washington Retreat League at a meeting last night at the Washington Retreat House, 4000 Harewood Road Northeast.

Mrs. F. W. Landvoight, of Nativity Parish, was elected vice president; Miss Pauline Donnelly, Holy Comforter parish, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. Lucy Goldsborough, St. Peter's Parish, recording secretary.

The Rev. Joseph S. Spence, spiritual director of the league, emphasized the value of spiritual retreats during the present condition of the world.

Benning Citizens Ask New Center

Benning Citizens Association last night voted to seek a community center as part of the proposed Benning High School.

The unit, in its last meeting of the year, adopted a new constitution and by-laws, and appointed a nominating committee, which includes Robert S. Clements, chairman; Joseph T. Cavanaugh, Frank E. James and T. T. Roberts.

The association will sponsor a Boy Scout troop. Douglas B. Jenkins heads the sponsoring committee.

"I'm a Stranger Myself, Lady"

A reporter and woman in charge were running through a list of guests at the Society of American Military Engineers' banquet at the Mayflower. "Our speaker," she said, "is Secretary of War Knox." "He is Secretary of Navy," the reporter gently corrected.

"Navy?" questioned the lady. "Then what's he doing here?"

Mystery of the Setting Hen

Berlin, Md., May 13 (A.P.).—Farmer W. C. Carmean put 12 eggs beneath a setting hen.

A few days later he lifted the hen and found—six gray kittens. Carmean said he didn't own a cat and couldn't find a trace of the 12 eggs. The hen won a battle to keep the kittens.

G. A. O. to Bring 3,000 Under Civil Service

General Accounting Office is prepared to bring 3,000 of its emergency employes under Civil Service on July 1. Highly important to G. A. O. employes is the fact that they won't be brought under merit through the Ramspeck Act, but through normal Civil Service procedure which will give them a far better chance to win full Civil Service status. It's a fact that the commission has already made arrangements to bring the 3,000 employes under merit. G. A. O. was given funds in its regular appropriation bill to pay the salaries of approximately 3,000 of the 3,200 workers who are paid by emergency funds. This will place their jobs under Civil Service automatically.

The commission will give G. A. O. employes 90 days after July 1 to qualify. During that period the employes must be fingerprinted, fill out Form 375, be given medical tests, get their legal residences determined and some will be given noncompetitive mental exams. To be eligible for Civil Service, temporary employes must have served for at least six months by July 1.

G. A. O. employes can be given more than one chance to pass noncompetitive mental tests. They can flunk up to three mental tests and still retain their present jobs under present rules. It's said that auditors, accountants, claims examiners and all personnel above them won't be given mental tests, but instead, will be graded on their records. A few emergency employes will be retained after July 1 and G. A. O. probably will ask for funds to hire several hundred additional, in the 1942 relief bill.

G. H. A. Votes on Dues

Group Health Association members are voting on a plan to adjust dues. It's proposed that dues for a single person be lowered from $2.20 to $3 a month. A man and his wife would continue to pay $4, but it's proposed to add $1 a month for each child in the family. The present rate is $5 for a family regardless of the number of children . . . A Federal Works report shows that USHA has built 90 per cent of the completed defense homes. Only 4,191 defense units are available for occupancy and USHA has built 3,747 of them. Eight different agencies are engaged in building defense homes.

Harry Holland, assistant personnel director of the War Department, is suffering from a physical breakdown from the heavy work load . . . OPM officials have complained about a guard on duty at its building. It seems that the guard tried to arrest a newspaperman for talking with a person who had been picketing the place . . . OPM has decided that it won't ask for the draft deferment of any man on its staff . . . OPM is in a dither over field offices. Production, priorities, labor, defense contracts, State and local among other devisions have or will set up field offices and none of them wants to share office space with the others . . . James LeCron, campaign manager for Vice President Wallace, has been appointed chief of the distribution division of Surplus Marketing Administration. Jonathan Garst, present chief, will return to San Francisco to head the regional office there.

Civil Service Commission will waive age restrictions for the 600,000 persons on its Interdepartmental Placement List, William C. Hull, executive assistant, has informed the UFWA. No person, however, who is past the retirement age may qualify for a Federal job . . . Civil Service tests: Fishery marketing specialist, $2,000 to $4,600, Fish and Wildlife Service; specialist in agriculture vocational education, $3,800, Office of Education.

President Roosevelt probably will announce a plan soon to cut expenditures of nondefense agencies. Understood to be under study is a plan whereby the Budget Bureau will review Congressional appropriations and recommend cuts to the President. If approved, the Budget Bureau will simply withhold the money and prevent the agencies from spending it. Agencies that are likely to feel the Budget Bureau knife are CCC, NYA, Agriculture and WPA. The President has frequently used this process to save funds. Last year nearly $100,000,000 was saved by the Budget Bureau withholding funds of reorganized agencies and others. Very little will be saved during the 1941 fiscal year that ends next month. Nearly every agency has had its work increased by the defense program.

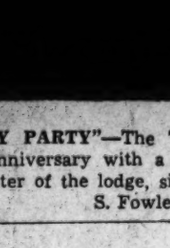
String Quartet and Pianist Give Recital at Cosmos Club

Chamber Music Guild presents its string quartet (Frank Gittelson, Alexander Levin, Benjamin Sosner and Marcel Ancher) and Irene Jacobi, pianist, on Tuesday night in the Cosmos Club assembly hall. Program: Negro Quartettino (Harl McDonald), Hagiographa for piano and string quartet (Frederick Jacobi).

Frank Gittelson and his colleagues in the Chamber Music Guild String Quartet made their seventh concert of the season memorable by devoting it to two living American composers, Harl McDonald and Frederick Jacobi. Moreover, neither of the works performed had been heard here before, a fact which doubled one's appreciation of their enterprise. Musicians who take the trouble to prepare a new work for introduction to the public deserve commendation not only for the extra time involved (it is so much easier to play a work they know practically by heart), but also for their interest in extending the general knowledg of musical literature.



BROWN

Harl McDonald's Negro Quartettino would seem to be one of his early compositions, inasmuch as it does not show the vitality and the creative force manifest in his music of the last few years. The title is justified more by the atmosphere of the music than by the use of recognizable Negro themes, although the first movement, Andante Lamentoso, has some phrases borrowed from spirituals. This is the strongest movement in a work which as a whole is wanting in vigorous affirmation. The Andante Patetico has some poetic moments of emotional urgency and the closing Allegro is enlivened by humor. Pizzacto passages weaken the Allegro, however, particularly in the ineffective final measures. When will composers realize that pizzicato, a technical trick, should be used sparingly in ensemble writing?

Irene Jacobi came from New York to play the piano part in her husband's quintet and received merited applause for her artistic excellence therein. Her authoritative reading was not only an assistance to her associates in matters of phrasing but also invaluable in the disclosure of the meaning of the music. Hagiographa is one of Mr. Jacobi's finest chamber music works, compact in substance, rich in harmonic texture and admirably written for the instruments.

The Hagiographa quintet is subtitled: Three Biblical Narratives—Job, Ruth and Joshua. Hagiographa is the Greek name for the last division of the Hebrew Scriptures, comprising all the books not contained in the Law and the Prophets. Job and Ruth fall into this category, but Mr. Jacobi took poetic license when he included Joshua in the group.

The characterization achieved in the music is subtle and exceedingly effective. One's imagination is stimulated by the strong subjectiveness of the music which expresses the unshakable integrity of Job under his afflictions, the nostalgia of Ruth "amid the alien corn" and the impetuous masterfulness of Joshua, the son of Nun, "who was full of the spirit of wisdom."

Miss Edmonston, Teacher, Ends Life In North Carolina

Miss Martha Edmonston, 37, daughter of David B. Edmonston, 1441 Fairmont Street Northwest, was found dead after having inhaled carbon monoxide gas in a parked automobile in the woods near Wilson, N. C., yesterday.

Miss Edmonston, dean of the department of languages at Atlantic Christian College in Wilson, was said by the coroner to have taken her own life, according to the Associated Press.

A note found scribbled on a sheet of notebook paper said, "No flowers, please." The body was found by a searching party sent out when Miss Edmonston failed to appear for a class.

She was born in Columbus, Ohio, and attended the public schools here. She attended George Washington University, receiving an M. A. degree from that institution before starting her teaching career at Atlantic Christian College.

Surviving, besides her father, are a sister, Mrs. Maynard Eicher, and a brother, J. Harvey Edmonston, both of Washington.

Funeral services will be held in Columbus, Ohio.

Woman Locked By Locksmith In Reducer Freed

A portly woman customer was almost reduced to tears last night by the time she got out of a reducing salon at 620 Twelfth Street Northwest.

She got locked in the Contour Slenderizing Salon after taking a treatment, and it was nearly midnight when she finally recovered her freedom with the aid of police, firemen and a locksmith.

The customer told police that she emerged from a dressing room to find everybody had gone and the placed locked up. She called police, who in turn called firemen. No. 2 Engine Company put a ladder to a second-floor window, but by that time a crowd of some 150 curious onlookers had assembled and the woman refused to descend.

Whereupon the firemen left, and the woman summoned Locksmith Ralph A. Lyons through the American Automobile Association. He picked at the lock for an hour and a half without success. Finally, he drilled the lock and obtained the embarrassed customer's release.

Clear Weather Forecast Hits Md. Farmers

Clear weather today and through the remainder of the week, forecast by the Weather Bureau last night, can't clear the frowns on the faces of Maryland farmers and Potomac boatmen.

Maryland farmlands need rain and sailors need higher tides.

The Weather Bureau couldn't give any reason for the rainfall deficiency which is general throughout the country and is 5.44 inches below average precipitation for this area since the beginning of the year. Tides recorded at 1.9 feet below mean low water are caused by a full moon and several days of constant northwest winds, rivermen said.

In a five-day forecast issued yesterday the Weather Bureau promised little alleviation. Temperatures below normal today will rise to about normal near the end of the week, it was said. Scattered showers forecast for this weekend over the northern Atlantic States may help the crops.

Drought was threatened in Virginia before last weekend's showers, county agricultural agents said. Unusually low temperatures for May have offset the April hot spell, placing Virginia crops at about their usual spring stage.

The low temperatures also have placed Maryland crops, which had been about two weeks ahead of schedule, back to their normal stage for this season.

Typical of the low temperatures for May was the mercury in Washington yesterday which ranged between 42 at 6 a. m. and 68 at 3:10 p. m.

Low tides, which are bad for fishing and destructive to boats, are gradually rising, the rivermen say, and are expected to be back to normal by this weekend.

Bids in on First Of Office Buildings

McCloskey and Co., Philadelphia contractors, yesterday submitted to the Public Buildings Administration a low bid of $499,777 for construction of a temporary Government office building at Fourth Street and Independence Avenue Southwest.

The proposed two-story frame structure is the first of six authorized by Congress for national defense work. It has not yet been decided what offices will be placed in the structure.

Second lowest bidder was W. F. O'Neil & Co., of Chicago, and third was the Harwood-Nebel Co., of Washington.

Higher Gas, Realty Taxes Seen for D. C.

Influential Senators Rally Behind Overton In His Insistence For $10,000,000

Higher realty and gasoline taxes and a Federal payment not to exceed the present $6,000,000—that was the picture of the District's fiscal prospects painted by House leaders last night in a post-mortem of the Overton formula.

On the other side of the Capitol, however, the picture was brighter as influential members of the Senate rallied behind Senator John H. Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, in his insistence on a $10,000,000 minimum Federal payment to help the District meet the additional cost of government resulting from the defense emergency.

Chairman Robert R. Reynolds of the Senate District Committee declared the District "entitled to relief and assistance" and said he would support Senator Overton "because he is a friend of the District." Reynolds' stand was backed by Senators Pat McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, and Arthur Capper (Republican), of Kansas, ranking minority member of the District Committee.

House in No Mood to Agree

While declining to be quoted by name in advance of consideration of the District supply bill by the House District appropriations subcommittee, leaders freely admitted that the House, at present at least, is in no mood to agree to a Federal payment in excess of the $6,000,000 voted for the fiscal year expiring June 30.

"If they would bring in bills to increase the real estate tax from $1.75 to 2.50 and the gasoline tax from 2 to 4 cents a gallon the measures would be passed in five minutes," one member said.

Bills for a $2.50 realty and a four-cent gas tax are now before the District Committee. They were introduced by Representatives Edward H. Rees, of Kansas, and Raymond S. Springer, of Indiana, both Republicans.

Meanwhile, Representative George H. Mahon (Democrat), of Texas, chairman of the House District appropriations subcommittee, declared that hearings on the District appropriations bill would start as soon as supply bills for the Federal departments have been cleared. Mahon said he was unable, at present, to name a starting date.

With a $4,000,000 spread in Senate and House views of the size of the Federal payment, the stage was set for a fiscal deadlock between the two houses reminiscent of a fight two years ago when the District Government was without operating funds for five days past the end of the fiscal year.

"A Terrible Mistake"

"Some day the two committees of Congress should sit down together and work out a fiscal plan in justice and fair play to the District," declared Senator McCarran. He stated that the Overton bill, "while a step in the right direction, doesn't go far enough in providing funds for the District."

"The Capital city is a Federal project and should be maintained on that basis," McCarran added.

The Nevadan called House defeat of the Overton bill "a terrible mistake," while Senator Capper, assuming that the House "acted in perfect good faith," declared he was "surprised and sorry to see" the formula killed.

Capper said he considered Overton's proposal for a $10,000,000 payment "a reasonable suggestion."

The fiscal formula proposed by the Overton bill would make the Federal payment equal to the ratio of United States land to the entire area of the District. Applied to the 1942 general fund estimates, it would produce a $9,300,000 payment.

D. C. Ballet Dancer Makes Professional Debut at Center

Lila Zalipskaya, 20-year-old Russian-born brunet who grew up in Washington, hade ner professional debut as a dancer here last night at the Jewish Community Center, in roles ranging from a Viennese flower girl to a bluebird.

Miss Zalipskaya, who lived here 14 years and received much of her training from Russian teachers here, made her homecoming appearance after recent tours with the Mordkin Ballet and after a formal dance recital in New York Sunday night.

Last night's audience glimpsed her first in a series of classic dances with Leon Varkas—dances from "Les Sylphides" by Chopin, with choreography by Mikhail Fokine. In frothy white tulle ballet skirt, at times she was like thistledown floating across the stage.

Her mother, Mme. Marie Zalipsky, former prima donna in Petrograd, played the piano accompaniment for the dances, with Milton Schwartz of the National Symphony Orchestra playing the violin obligato.

A group of other young dancers from the Mordkin Ballet also took part in the program. Elizabeth Townsend, niece of Pulitzer Prize winning playwright Robert Sherwood, appeared in the Viennese scene with others of the group. Ruth Terrel-Macy gave an Oriental character dance and a Spanish dance. Sari, blond dancer who uses only the one name, admitted backstage that for all its Oriental sound she is from Alanta, Ga.

Three Prisoners Cleared as Simon Slaying Suspects

Three colored men held in connection with several recent street robberies yesterday were rejected by police as possible suspects in the murder of Dr. Heinrich S. Simon, 61, German music master.

The three suspects, one of them held for murder, have confessed to numerous recent strong-arm cases and one even said he murdered Mrs. Rose Abramowitz. Police, however, discounted the men's stories and investigation proved their whereabouts the night Dr. Simon was slain.

A line-up before recent robbery victims was held at Police Headquarters last night.

Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, chief of detectives, said his men had uncovered no new clews in the Simon case, but added that the investigation "is still young."

"I believe that this case will be broken," he asserted. "Just give us a little time."

New Road to Fame Opens To Broadway Aspirants

George Abbott in Ardent Quest of Talent; The Cross Roads Theater Changes Policy; This, That and the Other About the Theater

A UNIQUE PLAN—with most of the uniqueness left out—for bringing young, new talent into the legitimate theater has been evolved by George Abbott in connection with his forthcoming production of the John Cecil Holm musical comedy, "Young Man's Fancy," which requires a large cast comprised almost exclusively of boys and girls of the 'teen age. What Mr. Abbot seems to have done is adopt the method pursued so long—and at times so successfully—by the cinema.

BELL

Dramatic schools, music studios and dancing academies in the Eastern States, as well as the theater workshops of schools and colleges, have been asked to submit lists of their most talented students, who are interested in a professional career on the Broadway stage. Arrangements will be promptly made Mr. Abbott seems to have done is adopt

When it is feasible, these auditions will take place in New York. Every application must be accompanied by written permission of the parents or guardians of the aspirants, authorizing the trip and its purpose.

The first group audition now is being arranged by Gene Kelly, featured in "Pal Joey," Mr. Abbott's current hit at the Barrymore Theater, in New York. Mr. Kelly apparently is playing both ends against the middle. He and his family own the Gene Kelly Studio of Dance, in Pittsburgh, and have had a list compiled of their most promising enrollees, as well as those of the University of Pittsburgh Dramatic Workshop. About 20 of them will make the junket to Manhattan.

The idea for the interstate talent search occurred to Mr. Abbott after his successful journey to Virginia with Vernon Duke, who induced the producer to hear some of his "discoveries" at the Feller School in Norfolk. Mr. Abbott signed three singers.

There is enough talent in Washington to flood Mr. Abbott's auditions with promise for weeks on end. Whether anyone will take advantage of the opportunity remains to be seen.

All of this, of course, ties in perfectly with Charles Coburn's recent contention that there is at present no visible source of supply of the future great of the theater. With those splendid training schools for the actor known by the names of "stock," "vaudeville" and "burlesque" largely gone by the boards, Mr. Abbott's method of securing new talent seems to be one of the few sane ones susceptible of successful operation. Mr. Coburn's is better. I mean the establishment of such an academy of dramatic art as he has conducted at Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., under the name of the Mohawk Drama Festival.

The Cross Roads Revises Policy

The Cross Roads Theater, over there within a weak pitching arm's stone's throw of Bailey's Cross Roads, Va., is innovating this year. Its ten-week season will open on June 17. There is no particular departure from custom in that, but there is in the fact that ten plays will be presented for one week each, instead of half that number for fortnight runs. Each play will be presented for six nights, including Sundays. The barn will be dark on Monday nights. This revolutionary change in policy has been made possible to the Messrs. Hohein, Linger and Hohein, operators of the Cross Roads, by the acquisition of a wealth of new acting talent through the medium of public tryouts and expansion of backstage facilities and personnel. Howard F. Wentworth will direct all ten of the prospective plays.

So who should barge into the dust bowl that used to be the drayma department before reconstruction raised its dirty head, but Frank Braden, chief oracle of the "big top" that will be rearing itself out at Twenty-first and C Streets Northeast, come day after tomorrow. Mr. Braden, whose fame will be imperishable by reason of his once having perched a midget on the knee of J. P. Morgan at a Senate hearing, is of the opinion that Norman Bel Geddes, famous designer, has streamlined the Ringling Brothers-Barnum & Bailey business into one of the greatest spectacles of all time. To prove it, he reels off a ledgerful of boxoffice statements that sound like a liquidation of the National debt. The show "turned 'em away" in New York, Boston and everywhere else it has played—if it has played anywhere else.

Mr. Hiser Pulls Another "Sneak"

Having acquired the habit by many successful invasions of a Hollywood prerogative, Henry Hiser is tossing another "sneak preview" in his Hiser Theater, Bethesda, Md., on Wednesday night at 8. Diana Wynyard, long absent from the local screen, will be the star of this one, the title of which, since the whole idea is a "sneak," may not be divulged.

Incidentally, Mr. Hiser reports that he has the ideal double-feature bill lined up for Friday, May 16. It will consist of "The Lady Vanishes" and "Night Train." This, by the way, will be the fifth engagement of "Night Train" at the Hiser Theater.

Elaine Berry, niece of a famous Washington columnist, will appear in the leading role of "George Washington Slept Here," when that George S. Kaufman-Moss Hart comedy hit is presented for the first time in Washington—and possibly the only time—by the Cue and Curtain Club of George Washington University. The playing dates are scheduled as May 15, 16, 17. Cue and Curtain is enabled to present this Broadway success only by special dispensation of the authors.

Brian Donlevy could do with a new press agent. There comes to hand, as the saying goes, a lengthy letter from Mr. Donlevy in which, over his ostensible signature, he goes on at great length about what a whale of a lot of fellows the drama desks are. He recalls some of our previous meetings and has at least half of his facts on straight. The other half are as cockeyed as the bonnets that sit in front of you in the picture houses. For one thing, our name is "Nels"—as such things go among our intimates. Mr. Donlevy is convinced that it is "Tom." That will give you as rough an idea as Mr. Donlevy had.

Personal-Aside-to-the-Weatherman Note

A coupla extra shovels of coal would be okay.

Life Paralleled In New Film

If Gregory La Cava were not shooting "Unfinished Business" at Universal "off the cuff," he might be suspected of "lifting" Irene Dunne's character from the star's real-life story.

La Cava never uses a script, preferring to write dialogue and plot situations from day to day. His record of hits testifies to the merit of his method.

Because no one, sometimes including La Cava, knows what's going to happen next, the director can hardly be accused of biographical plagiarism.

Yet in several ways Miss Dunne might be recreating a part of her own life in portions of her current portrayal.

The star is seen as a music teacher who graduates with high honors, leaves her home town and goes to New York to seek a career as a singing star. In real life Miss Dunne left her home town, Louisville, Ky., to attend the Chicago Musical College. She graduated with high honors, including a diamond award for singing excellence, and went to New York to seek a career as a singing star.

In real life, Miss Dunne was turned down after a Metropolitan Opera tryout. Same thing happens in this picture.

That is where the real-life and movie stories begin to diverge. In the picture, Miss Dunne becomes a night club soloist and fails to achieve singing stardom. In real life she became a musical comedy singer and eventually one of Broadway's greatest stars.

Why Should an Elephant Forget?

BOBBIE WARRINER

elephant trainer and high school horse rider in the Ringling Brothers-Barnum & Bailey Circus, opening its three-day Washington stand tomorrow, demonstrates why Myrtle, her favorite pachyderm, ought to exercise a good memory. Who wouldn't? Myrtle, by the way, is only one of 50 elephants with the "greatest show on earth"—which this season it seems to be

In Hollywood

Hollwood, May 13.

In "Flight Patrol" you'll see six carrier pigeons which were raised and trained by Tennant Wright, production manager at Warners. These pigeons, along with 19 others from Wright's ranch, were sent to the British R. A. F., where they are used as part of each plane's equipment. They can be trained in three to nine months to their new home. If a pilot's radio fails, or he gets into trouble, he releases his bird, which carries word back to headquarters.

When Bob Montgomery winds up "Heaven Can Wait," he'll head East for a three months' vacation, stopping in New York only long enough to see Ethel Barrymore in "The Corn Is Green," which he helped back. Then on to his farm at Martha's Vineyard, which has been occupied during the whole winter by two English families. But knowing Bob, I believe he'll be just as eager to get back to Hollywood as he was to get away for a vacation.

When a publicist asked a local columnist to interview Jane Russell, he said, "I'd like to if I can also talk to Howard Hughes." The answer was, "Oh, but that's impossible. Mr. Hughes never talks to the press." . . . I think it's a great pity Jane Russell's career is being handicapped in her first picture, "The Outlaw," because it was the studio who chose her dress which is causing all the agitation, not Jane herself.

The same thing was done to Jean Harlow in "Hell's Angels." She wore a gown which concealed practically nothing. When she spoke the line, "Excuse me while I slip on something comfortable," it was the biggest laugh in the picture.

Bob Taylor and Barbara Stanwyck may go from the West Indies, where they're now cruising, to Miami, an Clipper ship to South America quietly on their own. . . . Director Buzz Berkeley is set for wedding bells with Claire James, "Ziegfeld Girl" beauty.

Herbert Anderson, who replaced Eddie Albert in "Navy Blues," was visited by his 86-year-old grandmother. While Grandma was sitting on the sidelines, Jack Oakie came bounding onto the set, spied her, and exclaimed, "Well, well, well! So this is Herbert's grandmother! Welcome to Hollywood!"—and planted a big smack on Grandma's cheek. Grandma thought this was pretty fresh, and after Jack had gone, asked Herbert who he was. He told her, but the name of Jack Oakie left her unimpressed. "Well, you tell him," said Grandma to Herbert, "to mind his manners or I'll have him removed from the cast!"

That's a tasty role Francis Lederer has in "Puddin' Head." He eats in 62 scenes.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, May 13 (INS).—I don't know anyone in Hollywood who knows story values better than Sam Woods, so "I'll See You Again," written by Cy Bartlett, must be pretty good when Sam chooses to buy it. Sam is completely sold on my friend, Bob Cummings, who is playing Parris for him in "King's Row;" so sold that he wants to arrange with Universal to let him have Bob for the star in "I'll See You Again."

The boys in the Army camps all over the country are going to see our best motion picture talent in person. Joe Pasternak is just back from a visit to New Orleans and New York and he says New York is organizing companies to send not only to the United States, but to Canada, to give the boys in the training camps the cream of talent from the theatrical world. While Joe was in the East he bought "Between Us Girls," an original for Henry Koster.

Snapshots of Hollywood Collected at Random: Anne Nagel, whose engagement to Ensign John Robertson was first announced in this column, will wed in July; Rita Kaufman Lowe will christen her baby, Dorothy, as worked out by numerology; Eric Remarque's wife in town glimpsed at the Scheherazade with her author-husband. She is tall and has red hair; Betty Grable and George Raft, both well again, stepping out at Ciro's with Betty's ma in the party on account of it was Mother's Day.

Lew Fields looking so well in a family party at Romanoff's; Alan Campbell and Miriam Hopkins who had just talked with Dorothy Parker, who is in the East, also dining at Romanoff's; Barbara Hutton and Cary Grant in a party with the David Selznicks, Kay Francis and George Cukor at the Mocambo; John Farrow getting a royal welcome from all his friends when he and Maureen O'Sullivan walked in with the Selznick party; Myrna Loy and Arthur Hornblow, who were in the big town, return Wednesday; Barbara Stanwyck and Robert Taylor are also on their way home; the heat in Havana was terriffic, according to a letter Barbara wrote; Olivia de Havilland can't seem to make up her mind about boy friends. Her latest adorer, Franchot Tone, has apparently taken up with her where he left off a few months ago.

Alex D'Arcy and Arleen Whelan, who can't make up their minds about reconciling, dining at Victor's; Ben Blue heads the Slapsie Maxie show when it opens Wednesday; That's all today. See you tomorrow!

Three Prime Films Arrive In One Week

"CITIZEN KANE." The widely heralded Orson Welles film arrives Friday evening at RKO-Keith's Theater. Showings will be on a "road show" basis, with two matinees daily, at 2:30 and 5 o'clock, and evening performances at 8:30. Matinee seats will be priced at 75 cents, unreserved, with loge seats reserved at $1.10. All seats are reserved for the evening performances, at $1.10 and $1.65 for the loges. An RKO-Radio picture, the story of the ambitious newspaper publisher, is told by Welles' Mercury Theater actors, among whom are Joseph Cotton, Dorothy Comingore, Everett Sloan, George Coulounis, Ruth Warwick, Agnes Moorehead, Phil Stewart, Erskine Sanford and William Alland.

Earle

Capitol

"THAT UNCERTAIN FEELING." Merle Oberon and Melvyn Douglas are costarred in the latest froth to come from the directoral style of Ernst Lubitsch. Others involved in this matrimonial scramble started by a Russian novelist include Burgess Meredith, Eve Arden and Alan Mowbray. The Capitol stage revue is headlined by the ever-popular Salici Puppets, which have a complete revue of their own, and a new singing discovery from India, Sharma, a young man whose voice is reported to be as fine as his person is handsome. Opens tomorrow morning.

National

"FANTASIA." Successfully launched at Monday evening's gala opening, the Walt Disney triumph now settles down to twice daily showing on the E Street screen. The Disney drawings, rich in both color and humor, are accompanied by the Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Leopold Stokowski, and comments from Deems Taylor. The engagement is on a reserved seat basis, with tickets available at the National box office.

Palace

"THE ROAD TO ZANZIBAR." Bing Crosby, Bob Hope and Dorothy Lamour continue for a second week in their merry successor to "The Road to Singapore." This time the two gay blades embark on an African safari and meet the vivid Miss Lamour, beclad only in a grass skirt.

Metropolitan

"PENNY SERENADE." Irene Dunne and Cary Grant return for a third week downtown in their latest costarring vehicle. The story concerns an irresponsible reporter who marries a music store salesgirl before he leaves for Tokyo on an assignment. Beulah Bondi, Edgar Buchanan and Ann Doran are featured. Opens Friday morning.

Columbia

"ZIEGFELD GIRL." The musical film which recently completed two weeks at the Palace returns to F Street. Judy Garland, Hedy Lamarr, Lana Turner, James Stewart, Tony Martin, Charles Winninger, Al Shean, Jackie Cooper and Edward Everett Horton are in the star-studded cast. Opens tomorrow morning.

Little

"THE GIRL IN THE NEWS." The star and director of "Night Train" are the motivating forces in this mystery tale from England, continuing for a second week. Margaret Lockwood plays a nurse who twice becomes involved in murder cases and Carol Reed directed an all-British cast headed by Barry K. Barnes.

Trans-Lux

"MEN OF THE FBI—1941." The latest of the "March of Time" series, filmed with the cooperation of the Department of Justice, tops the incoming bill at the newsreel house. "So You Think You Know Music," a novelty in screen quiz presentations, has Jessica Dragonette, Hendrik William Van Loon and Col. Stoopnagle as experts. Popeye in "Quiet, Please" is the cartoon.

The Circus

RINGLING BROTHERS AND BARNUM AND BAILEY'S CIRCUS arrives tomorrow for its annual three-day visit to the Capital. The big show's tents will be pitched at Twenty-first and C Streets northeast, with performances set for 2:15 and 8:15 p. m. Gargantua is but one of the hundreds of attractions promised by the streamlined circus, designed by Norman Bel Geddes. Tickets downtown at the A. A. A., Seventeenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue.

Wilson Line

THE S. S. MOUNT VERNON, streamlined vessel of the Wilson Lines, commences its summer season of cruises down the Potomac tomorrow night with a benefit jaunt sponsored by the Reciprocity Club of Washington. Daily trips to Mount Vernon at 10 a. m. and 2 p. m., with hour and a half stopovers at Mount Vernon each trip. Moonlight cruises nightly at 8:30. Sails from the Seventh Street wharves.

Glen Echo

THE HAUNTED HOUSE is adding its part to the gayety of the Nation as one of the leading attractions at Glen Echo Amusement Park. A trip through the "house" reveals added novelties for this season. Paul Kain's Orchestra plays for dancing week nights from 9 to midnight in the Spanish Garden Ballroom.

Gayety

"TUNZAPOPPIN'." Pat Paree stars in the burlesque center's incoming attraction opening Sunday afternoon. Joan Mavis, Elsa Greenwell, Diane Johnson, Harry Clex, I. B. Hamp, Bob Taylor and Billy Crooks top the supporting company. Valerie Park, this week's headliner, continues through the Saturday midnight performance.

Leonard Lyons:

New York, May 13.

CORDELL HULL: A new German government is being organized here and in Canada, by a man who was one of the leaders of the old Weimar Republic and who escaped from a concentration camp. He also is organizing a Carl Schurz battalion for Canada, to be composed of German exiles who are anxious to fight the Nazis. Herr B. hopes to attain government-in-exile status for his group . . . TULIO CARMINATI: The $250,000 collected for the Fascist benefit show here, which was called off, will be put to good use—via attachment . . . PRIVATE JIMMY STEWART: Matty Fox, the 32-year-old vice president of Universal Films, will follow you into the Army. He's being drafted.

LYONS

AMBASSADOR HU SHIH: The American Government will open the Burma Road and make sure that supplies will reach your government in China. The foremost motors and traffic expert will be sent there soon to make a survey as to the most effective way of getting the supply trucks through, on schedule, and with no damage.

FIORELLO LAGUARDIA: Ed Flynn will get you the Democratic nomination for mayor if you agree to be a candidate again . . . GEORGE JEAN NATHAN: If Eugene O'Neill's present condition continues, then his play, "The Ice Man Cometh"—which you said was the best America had seen—will not be produced. He says he just isn't interested in the drama while the world is in its present state.

POLICE COMMISSIONER VALENTINE: Mike Rosenberg, a member of the draft board in Manhattan, was confronted with a case in which the draftee is a policeman. Rosenberg's wife, Anna—the labor relations specialist, Social Security executive and administrator of ten other jobs—asked the mayor whether he still was anxious for patrolmen to receive deferments. The mayor said he'd prefer that. And so Mike Rosenberg deferred that policeman—although six weeks ago that very cop gave Mike a traffic ticket.

WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE: When Leon Henderson appeared before you last week, advocating a 20 per cent tax on automobiles, some of your members expressed fear that car owners would have to find other means of transportation within a few years because of auto breakdowns . . . Henderson owns and operates a 1929 car . . . NELSON ROCKEFELLER: Katharine Brush tried to do some Pan American good will. She brought to the attention of a Hollywood producer a book written by a South American lady. The producer wasn't interested, but made another movie. The South American brought a $50,000 plagiarism suit.

ADELAIDE MOFFETT: Your husband, Bill Buckner, has a contract to produce movies in Mexico. . . . CHAIRMAN JIM FLY: Several radio officials—who will suffer from your FCC ruling of last week, affecting the radio chains—will issue their first blasts at you when you appear at their convention in St. Louis.

PAUL WHITEMAN: Joe Alsop, of Alsop & Kintner, the Washington columnists, lost almost as many pounds as you once did by a careful dieting process—to which he still must adhere to remain slender. Alsop has been deferred by his draft board for a logical, but unusual, reason: He's still subject to an expanding waistline. And if he ever begins to eat the Army food, instead of adhering to his diet, he'd gain too much weight to be of any use to the Army.

GENE TUNNEY: When Jack Dempsey was heavyweight champion, many parents throughout the country named their children after him. Those children now are being graduated from high schools and some from colleges. Dempsey will invite 25 of these boys to visit New York this summer, at his expense . . . CAMILLE CHAUTEMPS: Wasn't it your plan—to have that American commission to go to General Weygand, in Africa, for a food deal? . . . ALUMINUM CO. OF AMERICA: A new aluminum process soon will be announced. The Government will help finance its manufacturing. . . . CROSLEY: Alexander Woollcott, whose tour will end shortly, will return to broadcasting—to see whether he likes it.

TONY GALENTO: Three more important breweries will be merged. Lowell Birrell, who has merged seven of them, will negotiate this deal. . . . EQUITY: Ed Wynn, who was the first to bring a troupe of entertainers to a military camp, under Government auspices, will make his report to the White House. Wynn will recommend the building of theaters, instead of having the shows presented outdoors, because too few of the soldiers were within eye-and-ear shot.

SECRETARY ICKES: Your worries about Wendell Willkie's taking a Goverament post can be allayed, for some time yet. Willkie says: "I'll accept a Government job—only if we're in the war."

9 More Camp Sites Selected For Use if Army Is Doubled

The Army disclosed yesterday that it had selected nine sites for new cantonments to be used in case plans for doubling the 1,400,000-man military force are put into effect.

One of the sites chosen is in the vicinity of Blackstone, Va., close to Appomattox Courthouse and other areas important in American military history. The others are near Augusta, Ga.; Neosho, Mo.; Fort Smith, Ark.; Columbus, Ind.; Santa Maria-Lompoc, Calif.; Medford Oreg.; Eugene, Oreg., and Cookson Hills, Okla.

The cantonment sites were selected after detailed surveys had been made by Army boards to determine their suitability. Congress appropriated $15,000,000 to make detailed engineering surveys of future camp sites in case the Army is expanded after finding that the present camp construction program cost hundreds of millions more than anticipated due to lack of such data.

Each of the new camps will house about 35,000 troops and will contain a training area of from $40,000 to 60,000 acres in addition to target ranges, drill fields and review areas. Some 20 to 25 additional sites are to be selected for possible future Army camps under the surveys now in process.

Hard of Hearing Elect

The Washington Society for the Hard of Hearing announced yesterday that it had elected the following officers for the coming year: Miss Lena L. Burgdorf, president; Miss Minnie M. Hill, first vice president; Mrs. Elizabeth Owen, second vice president; Miss Alice Alexander, secretary, and Mrs. Hobart M. Shaw, treasurer.

D. C. Boards Set First June Draft Quotas

Local board quotas for the first June call of 309 men, to be inducted June 3 and 4, were announced yesterday by District Selective Service headquarters.

At the same time names of 34 registrants to be sworn in today at Baltimore were disclosed.

Meanwhile, Chairman Andrew J. May, of the House Military Affairs Committee, received a proposal to reduce the maximum age limit of selectees with a declaration that national selective officials were "not going to cram anything down our throats." He said the committee would make a thorough study of the plan, which was advanced in a letter to Speaker Rayburn from Lewis B. Hershey, deputy national Selective Service director.

House Merit Unit Favors Uniform Promotion System

Legislation to establish a uniform system of promotions in the Federal civil service was favorably reported by the House Civil Service Committee yesterday.

The bill divides Federal workers into two groups for purposes of promotion. In the first group are employes whose rate of pay increase, under the classification act, is from $60 to $100 a year. In the second group are workers eligible for pay raises at the rate of $250.

With a good efficiency rating, workers in the first group would be entitled to step up one grade in the classified service every 18 months. In the second group the rate of advancement would be once every 30 months.

The measure, as reported, is similar to a bill proposed by the Budget Bureau except for an amendment which would bring employes of the Customs Bureau within its provisions.

There are many different kinds of houses. Some houses are small; other houses are large. Large families need large houses. Houses can be made of wood, brick, and stone. They may have only one room, or they may have several rooms. Farm houses are not usually close together. City houses do not have much land around them. Not all people own the houses in which they live. Many people rent their homes.

U. S. Will Train Thousands Of Britons to Be R. A. F. Pilots

Plans for training thousands of young Britons in the United States to be pilots in the R. A. F. were disclosed yesterday.

Under the program, now being whipped into final shape, Great Britain will send men here for training in civilian flying schools with the training planes, dormitories, instructors and other facilities supplied by the United States under the lease-lend program.

Officials at the British Embassy said that the present plan contemplates sending the pilots back to England, as soon as they receive their wings, for further training as combat fliers, but that they hope the United States Army later will be able to complete their instruction as military pilots.

Negotiations are not yet quite complete but an Embassy spokesman said three civilian flying schools have been selected for the training and that two or three more probably will be used. Those selected are the Dallas Flying School, Dallas, Tex., Aircraft Industries, Glendale, Calif., and the Spartan Aircraft School, Tulsa.

The first group of students brought over early this summer will not run more than 100, but within a short time it is planned to have from 500 to 1,000 men under training. Later much greater numbers may be sent, it was said. The course planned will last from 15 to 30 weeks.

In recent months the output of training planes from American aircraft plants has undergone sharp increases, making the fulfillment of such a long desired scheme possible. Negotiations have been under way between British and American officials for months.

Big Reservoir Set To Aid Defense

(This is the last of a series of articles by Inez Robb about women in America's key defense industries.)

By Inez Robb
International News Service Staff Writer

As of the last census, there are 35,788,803 women in the United States between the ages of 14 and 64. This is a reservoir of almost unimaginable magnitude from which the Nation can literally arm its fields and factories in any national emergency that might siphon the country's manpower into other channels.

So far the demands of the greatest armament program in history, a program designed to rearm democracy and put freedom in fighting trim, has not even made a ripple on the surface of this vast reservoir of willing hands, heads and hearts.

No prophet can safely predict the shape of things to come. Who could dream there would one day be compulsory labor camps for women, even in Germany?

What man in his right mind would have envisioned Great Britain conscripting its young women for work in wartime industry?

Yet already there is talk in America of drafting young women, no less than young men, for a year's service for their country. The wife of the President is one of the leading voices in this chorus, small to date.

"If we compel our children, for their own good, to go to school," Mrs. Roosevelt wrote recently in a magazine article in reference to drafting young women no less than young men, "I see nothing undemocratic in giving the people of the country an opportunity to decide at the polls whether they believe a year's service at a given age would be of value to individuals and to the Nation as a whole."

In the meantime, women have not waited to be drafted. Throughout this Nation, in every State in the Union, women are at work today in an amazing variety of defense work. They will not have to prove themselves in a draft. They have already proved themselves voluntarily in jobs for which industry itself has commandeered their talents.

The Government itself has been among the first of the Nation's employers to avail itself of women's special talents in the rearmament program. Miss Harriet Elliott is the only woman on the National Defense Advisory Commission, but she is charged with the important field of consumer problems.

Known affectionately as "Aunt Hit," this brisk little woman, who has taught political science for almost 30 years, came to Washington from Greensboro, where she is dean of the women's college of the University of North Carolina.

The high cost of living is Aunt Hit's primary concern. Inflation, the bugaboo that scares big business no less than housewives, is her baby. It doesn't have a Chinaman's chance in this crisis, she declares.

The Office of Production Management itself drafted Mary I. Barber from private industry as food adviser and consultant to the subsistence division of the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army. Borrowed from one of the industrial food firms that has made Battle Creek, Mich., world famous, Miss Barber flatly declares "ours is the best fed army in the world."

If and when American women are ever drafted by their Government for industrial service, Mrs. Florence Kerr, assistant WPA commissioner, will have had a substantial behind the scenes share in drafting ways and means. There are already 300,000 women in the community service division of the WPA. The two largest departments that can readily be turned into defense channels are the housekeeping aid centers and the institutional training centers.

There are now 3,000 housekeeping aid centers in this country In such centers, women, who need not necessarily be on relief, get instructions in all sorts of housekeeping duties, cooking, canning, sewing and child care.

Probably the most famous woman engineer in America, Dr. Lillian M. Gilbreth, already has turned her keen mind on the problems involved in training great numbers of women for the benefit of the nation.

With Dean A. A. Potter, of Purdue University, she is studying the coordination of training in American technical colleges with the nation's defense program. Dean Potter heads this work, but Dr. Gilbreth is an able assistant.

The road ahead is long and unchanged. But the women of America are determined that it shall be free. To this end they have not waited to be drafted; they have simply gone to work wherever they are needed.

To this end their nimble fingers and their burnished minds already are dedicated to the forging of the ships and planes, the tanks and cannon, the arms and ammunition to turn America into a veritable arsenal of democracy from which free men may draw the weapons to guard their freedom.

Marts Warned Again on Undue Speculation

By the Associated Press

Following up recent warnings against "excessive" speculation in farm products, the Agriculture Department yesterday asked commodities future markets to adopt new and more stringent regulations on trading lest they become "targets of public criticism" and be closed as a consequence.

J. M. Mehl, chief of the department's Commodity Exchange Administration, sent letters to the markets asking them to appoint committees immediately to report on new regulations.

This action was taken after recent and rather sharp advances in some commodity futures, particularly cottonseed oil and soybeans. It was the third time in less than a week that the department had warned against undue speculation.

Mehl, in his letter, said the markets faced two "major" problems. One, he said, was directly related to the defense program—that of holding speculation to a minimum.

"Changed Conditions"

The second, he said, involved "a frank recognition of the changed conditions that have come about in agricultural marketing and distribution" as a consequence of Federal crop programs designed to stabilize prices and supplies of farm products.

In commenting on the first problem, Mehl said:

"At this moment there is little danger of a speculative movement affecting prices of surplus agricultural commodities such as wheat and cotton. There is no assurance, however, that this situation may not change. There has been considerable speculative interest in cottonseed oil and in soybeans.

"It would be unfortunate if excessive speculation in any commodity should be allowed to develop in this emergency, resulting perhaps in the closing of all commodity futures markets. The exchanges cannot afford to treat lightly the responsibility of seeing that this does not occur."

The Second Problem

As to the problem of meeting changed conditions in marketings, Mehl wrote the markets:

"The futures markets cannot hope to be restablished on the foundation of large public participation and world-wide speculative interest. They must find their opportunity for growth and service in the direction of fuller and more balanced use by trade interests—those engaged in the business of marketing, merchandising and processing. There is now more need than ever for protection against minor price fluctuations and for economy in distribution."

House Votes Higher Loans On Five Crops

By the Associated Press

The House overwhelmingly approved higher loans to farmers yesterday on this year's crops of wheat, cotton, corn, tobacco and rice, with stiff penalties for exceeding marketing quotas.

Agriculture Department officials had estimated that the higher loans would increase food costs to consumers by 10 to 20 per cent, but Edward A. O'Neal, American Farm Bureau president, today denied these contentions. He said that "the increased cost to the consumer would be of very little consequence" and estimated that pork would go up 5 per cent, bread one-sixth cent a loaf and cotton 1.6 to 1.8 per cent.

By a roll call vote of 275 to 63, the House approved and sent to the Senate a compromise bill to require the Government to make loans of 85 per cent of parity on the five crops.

Farm members said that if a farmer chose to put his crop in the new loan program at 85 per cent of parity, his soil conservatoin benefits and cash parity payments would result in an approximate yield of full parity—a goal which has not been reached in many years.

(Parity prices are those which would give farmers purchasing power, in terms of other commodities, equal to that of 1909-1914.)

The legislation would require loans as follows: Wheat, 96.22 cents a bushel; corn, 69.87 cents; cotton, 13.49 cents a pound; flue-cured tobacco, 19 cents a pound; rice, $1.96. Current market prices are approximately as follows: Wheat, $1; corn, 77 cents; cotton, 12.30 cents.

With prices rising—and certain to rise still more when the price-pegging loan program becomes effective as the crops are marketed—predictions were made in the House that small quantities of all commodities actually would be placed in the loan because they could move more easily in the markets.

Although it was assumed in both the Senate and House that President Roosevelt would sign the new legislation, some members said a veto would mean that they might have to fall back on outright parity appropriations to maintain farm prices.

They say a veto would pave the way for final approval of a $450,000,000 parity fund voted by the Senate in the Agriculture Department supply bill, despite Administration opposition. The House, sticking to the President's budget estimates, approved $212,000,000. Senate and House conferees probably will not attempt to reconcile the difference until after the President has acted on the loan bill.

14 Police Guests Of Lord Halifax

Kansas City, May 13 (AP).—Fourteen policemen went to the movies tonight as guests of Lord Halifax, British Ambassador, and Lady Halifax.

The policemen have been escorting the Ambassador and his lady around the city. Today Capt. Stanley Beatty, of the Kansas City (Kans.) Police Department, took two orchids to the envoy's hotel suite as a corsage for Lady Halifax. The theater invitation was the response.

Bund Chief Freed After His Arrest Near Plane Plant

South Bend, Ind., May 13 (AP).—Gerhard Wilhelm Kunze, national president of the German-American Bund, was seized by police today as he left what police described as a meeting of bund sympathizers in a private home near the Bendix Aviation Corporation plant humming with defense production.

Kunze and four others questioned were released, Police Chief W. K. Ingram said, because no law violation was discovered.

Ingram quoted Kunze as saying he came here in the course of a 11,000-mile coast-to-coast trip in the interests of the A. V. Publishing Corporation of New York. One of those questioned was described as a tool maker in the Bendix plant.

BARNEE TO HOLLYWOOD. The Shoreham's Barnee is off to Hollywood by plane. But not to stay; just for ten days of visiting around the studios and with Hedy La Marr and Lana Turner (he hopes, he hopes). This is the first vacation Barnee's had within the memory of man, and richly he deserves it. Al Kamons will wave the baton while Barnee's away . . . Barrington Sharma's singing debut at the Shoreham was a breaker-upper, especially in the rollicking "Nichevo." His sponsor, newswoman Mabelle Jennings, looked both gratified and very pretty in a new starched chiffon gown of "lucky blue."

Last C. C. Call! Carmen Cavallaro and his orchestra close at the Cosmos Room tonight after a record-cracking engagement. Tomorrow you'll find the lovely Three Debs making their Washington debut in the Carlton cocktail lounge.

"HUMANETTES" AND MAYFAIRETTES are contending in the new Lotus revue. The Mayfair Girls are mighty purty, gowned in as many colors as a Spanish omelet. But nothing less than uncanny are the "Humanettes," puppets jiggled by Frederick and Dawn. They include two moustachioed acrobats, a magician in white satin, a callipygean (it'll pay you to look that one up) strip teaser, two devil dancers accompanied by an ostrich and a snake, a neon-lighted skeleton, a purple pup and a beauteous little roller-skater. The dancing Chadwicks step in the lacquered manner and singer Mary La Marr, formerly of the Madrillon and Paul Young's and well known on the radio, has joined Bill Strickland's band. It adds up to one of Lotus' best revues of the season.

PLEASANT VISITORS. Hi Hat. Judge George D. Neilson, of the Traffic Court. And do Jimmy Summerville's Four M's pay prompt attention to his requests! . . . Miss Catherine L. Hunsacker, secretary to Secretary Ickes, with John Hicks, 3d. . . . Rainbow's psychoanalyst, Guido, says she's the most interesting person he's met in Washington . . . Madrillon. Senator Bob La Follette enjoying his favorite tune, the song of the University of Wisconsin, as played by Bert Bernath's orchestra. . . . Dick's Grill. A bunch of the boys from Charlie Spivak's band at the Earle Theater, all eating like mad so they wouldn't be late for their next show. We hope they made it.

Laczi, the handsome gypsy cymbalon player at the Plymouth, and Jane Marlow, the cunning, and ever smiling violinist at Restaurant "823," will be married in September. This will be sad reading, we fear, for a certain young man.

TROIKA GOES LITERARY. Mischa, Troika's elegant greeter, is rejoicing in a copy of "Westward Ho," presented to him by its author, explorer William La Varre. It was promised away back on Valentine's Day, but M. La Varre didn't forget, brought it along when he dined at Troika the other night . . . Mrs. Alvia Melton recently presented Maestro Sascha Lukas with a book of her poems which is now his preferred reading. He's thinking of writing music to some of them.

GLEN ECHO BACKGROUNDS. Jesse Latto, who plays vibes and drums with Paul Kain's band at Glen Echo, is a University of Pittsburgh grad. . . . Songbird Adele Van sang in Washington juvenile programs at the age of 11. . . . Giutarist Bill Gibson has strummed at both the Carlton and Raleigh Hotels . . . Trombonist Dick Leith is a native of good old Rockville, Md.

PALATE PLEASERS. The miraculously tasty appetizers served in the Mayflower Lounge at the cocktail hours. Especially the tiny hot biscuits filled with Italian sausage . . . Olmsted's notable rum buns. You'll find yourself eating a dozen . . . The soft shell crabs arriving at Hogate's. Manager Roulon says they're especially fine this season.

Everybody Seems Pleased With the Fight

Aside from the wailing in gamblers' row, where the boys took a pasting on the 2-to-1 odds in favor of Harry Jeffra, the citizens did not seem to be at all outraged by the decision given Joey Archibald the other night at Griffith Stadium. Jeffra was supposed to win, but such matters are not to be taken for granted.

POVICH

It might be pertinent to say that Archibald's luck held out, inasmuch as he has always been returned the winner in his 21 Washington fights, but it happens that there was little luck attached to Archibald's victory the other night. At least, Archibald had little luck aside from the fact that Jeffra was helping him to fight the only kind of fight Archibald knows.

The fans had come to see justice done. Lingering with them was the 2-year-old travesty of the decision in favor of Archibald in their last Griffith Stadium affair when Jeffra won the fight and lost the verdict. It was a pro-Jeffra crowd at the outset and the fact that there was an absence of boos when Archibald's hand was raised at the finish seems to justify the decision better than anything that was recorded on the scorecards of the judges.

Fact is that Jeffra was just a tired old man of the prize ring in there against a brawling little alley fighter who ran the fight to suit himself after the early rounds. Archibald is not much of a champion, but against a powder-puff puncher such as Jeffra he was in the proper spot. Somehow, Arichibald seems to react well to Washington rings. In Baltimore, Providence, Paducah and other outlying precincts he may be a bum, but in Washington he does very well and his chin takes on a new sort of firmness.

Archibald wouldn't know how to defend himself against a cigar store Indian. At infighting he is a complete wash-out, but he doesn't permit any infighting. He rushes, hits and grabs and gets away with it. He's no smart boxer, just a bit shrewd in there. He was fighting best the other night when he was stung and that's when he hurt Jeffra.

Jeffra Had the Class, but Archie Got the Duke

Jeffra had all the class that was in the ring, but Archibald won the fight. Jeffra did all the leading, but too often it was with his chin or a wide-open midsection. Two, three or four years ago, Jeffra would have made a mess of Archibald, but his punches carried no authority the other night.

There was no great confidence in Archibald's corner before the fight. His manager, Al Weil, scanned the slim crowd and threw up his hands. "We're not gonna get any money out of this, so we might just as well try to do our best and let it go at that." They weren't the words of a man who expected his fighter to win. Jeffra had licked Archibald decisively twice within the past two years. There was an air of resignation in Archibald's corner before the opening bell.

Archibald's handlers were on the bit, though, after the first couple of rounds. Their boy was not doing badly at all and was fighting well within himself. Jeffra was bounding all over the ring and boxing fancily, but he wasn't hurting Archibald and the confidence seeped back into the challenger's corner. Archibald, himself, was the same cocky little guy who used to be the Washington favorite when he was fighting for his cookies here as a preliminary boy.

New Champion Satisfied With Himself

In the dressing rooms after the fight, there were explanations to be had. Jeffra more than intimated why he was not eager to carry the fight to Archibald with any great fervor. "Why should I crack my hands on that guy's skull?" he said. "He was always ducking and wanting me to bang him on top of the head and I wasn't going to bust myself up when I think I am winning anyway."

Archibald, delighted with himself as usual after a winning fight, credited himself with fighting a smart battle. "I let him come to me in the early rounds and then I took charge of him. I'm supposed to be a dirty fighter, but he was the guy who wouldn't be a sportsman. I tried to be nice about it and stuck out my gloves when I got up from a slip, and what does he do but belt me in the belly. He never got that chance again."

Archibald doesn't owe Washington fight fans anything. He has provided excitement whether he has ben winning fights in the ring or in the minds of the judges. The little fellow is not even a very good fighter. But he appeals to that primitive delight at a brawl.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

Re Louis, But Not Much Boxing

This is a piece about Joe Louis, but we doubt if there will be much boxing in it. Somehow, when you sit down with Joe, you don't like to talk fighting. He gets shy when you bring up his profession. He has a hungry mind, Joe has. Hungry to hear something he hasn't heard before. And when he talks he likes to talk about other things. He's as modest and humble and gentle as a colored Joe Palooka.

CONSIDINE

"I don't think I'm gonna get drafted," he said, for instance, while he lay stretched out on his rubbing table at Riverside Arena, where he is training for next week's fight against Buddy Baer. "I got dependents. Plenty of them. I think they'll put me in class 3. Dunno, though. I made out my questionnaire 'way back when I fought Al McCoy in December. I never heard from them since. But, like I said, I'm ready if they need me."

We asked him about his dude ranch. He likes to talk about that.

"It's wonderful now," he said, turning over lazily on his hard bed. "Everything's pretty. Some day I'm going to make it real good. I'm going to put up a hotel there. Place for my people to stay.

Wants Hotel and Golf Course

"I get a lot of mail, all the time, from people from down South. They're driving some place around Detroit, see, and they want to know if I can put them up at my 'ho-tel.' They think I've got a ho-tel on my place. Some day I'm going to have one. It'll be a nice place for them to stop . . . It'll be a nice re-sort. About 200 rooms. I had 141 hossback riders Sunday. That's fine for me.

I'm going to put up a champeenship golf course on my place, too. I got 487 acres. That's plenty of room for a champeenship golf course. My game? I got down in the 70's five times last year, but now I'm around 85. It's my short game. I just ain't got that delicate touch around the greens. That, and my long irons. They bad, too. I got to get longer handles. I top too many shots. My woods are okay, though, I guess. But they're gonna be better when Walter Hagen makes me that 'bomber.' That's what they call those big-faced drivers. Boy, you can hit 'em a mile with them.

"You know why I'm not fightin' in August, don't you? That's my golf month. I told them 'No fighting in August.' I play in a tournament at the Argus Club outside of Detroit, around the middle of the month. Then I'm gone to Boston and play in the national colored championship. I sure hope I do good."

Joe's Got System to Beat Horses

Jack Blackburn came over and said, "It's time, Chappie." Joe pulled on his fighting togs and sat up on the edge of the table and Blackburn began that fascinating ritual of wrapping his hands. It is too bad the boxing public can't see that. It is a work of great art, this winding of gauze and tape around Joe's paws.

We asked Joe about his hands, as we stood there watching Blackburn work.

"They're okay . . . except for this," he said, taking his right hand off the medicine ball which was serving as a resting place while they were being wrapped. He showed us his long, brown ring finger. "See how it's bent. I done it in the Simon fight. It ain't broken. Just jammed, but jammed pretty bad. See it bends two ways. But it's okay. It didn't bother me against Musto . . . maybe because I used my left so much."

"Chappie's got wonderful hands," the razzor-scarred Blackburn said, in his quick out-of-the-corner-of-the-mouth way. "The best I ever saw on a puncher. Fitzzsimmons' hands were terrible; always cracking up. Johnson's hands? They were good. Why shouldn't they have been? He couldn't hit hard enough to hurt them."

HERE'S HOW PITCHER SID HUDSON'S SQUEEZE BUNT WORKED TO BRING BLOODWORTH HOME WITH TYING RUN IN SIXTH AS NATS BEAT TIGERS YESTERDAY

Three-Hitter Beats Detroit Tenth Time

Nats Spot Visitors 4 Runs on Errors in 3d; NewsomChasedin6th; Vernon Is Co-Hero

By Shirley Povich
Post Staff Writer

Washington's bargain counter pickup, Sidney Hudson, outpitched $30,000-salaried Buck Newsom at Griffith Stadium yesterday afternoon, and the Nats continued to beat the Detroit Tigers, their pet victims of 1941. The score was close, 5 to 4, but the pitching battle wasn't. Newsom was to be seen only in the Tigers' dugout after facing two batters in the sixth inning.

It was a three-hit game that the angular young right-hander threw at the Tigers who were collecting, incidentally, their fifth straight defeat. The Nats' charm over the Tigers, which began with 7 straight lickings in the South during the spring, has now expanded to 10 straight games.

Hudson did all right yesterday. A pair of errors, one of his own making, help stake the Tigers to a 4-0 lead as early as the third inning, but thereafter the Washington rookie was a very difficult man for the Detroit club. The last six innings contained only one hit for the Tigers, who haven't won a ball game in seven attempts on the road this season.

Young Mickey Vernon barged into coheroism along with Hudson again yesterday. Vernon delivered the blow that put the Nats back in the ball game during a three-run fifth inninng. It was a lustily socked three-bagger high off the wall in right center and it was loaded with two Washington runs.

Benton Losing Pitcher

Newsom escaped charge for the defeat, incidentally. That befell his successor, blond Al Benton, who moved into the game with none out in the sixth and put the winning run on base by pitching four straight balls to Ben Chapman. Eventually, in that inning, it was a squeeze bunt by Hudson that fetched the tying run home, and a long fly by George Case which produced the one-run lead that Hudson made stand up magnificently.

Big Newsom was breezing along in the comforts of his 4-to-0 lead when all of a sudden the Nats got

Boudreau's Homer Wins for Indians, 2-1

Yankees Bow To Feller in 10 Innings

Tribe Ace Hangs Up His Sixth Victory Despite Mental Lapse Of Tribe Infield

By the Associated Press

New York, May 13.—Lou Boudreau sliced a home run into the right field stands of Yankee Stadium in the tenth inning today to hand Bob Feller and the Cleveland Indians a 2-to-1 victory over the New York Yankees.

It was a well-earned triumph for Feller, his sixth of the season against two defeats, but he might have had it easier except for a mental lapse by the Indians' infield in the sixth inning when the Yankees scored their only run.

Bombers Are Silenced

Up till that time the 22-year-old Iowa farm boy had muffled the bombers to one single, but Scooter Rizzuto led off the sixth with a stinging double into left center. Red Rolfe bunted toward first and Feller fielded cleanly, but when he turned to throw no one was on the bag. Second Baseman Ray Mack ran over and stood on the bag an instant, then got off to make room for First Baseman Hal Trosky. In the confusion Feller threw and nobody caught the ball. Rizzuto scored and Rolfe went to second.

The play was scored as a hit for Rolfe and an error for Feller, although he was blameless.

In other days Feller might have "blown up," but he struck out the next batter and kept the Yankees smothered until his teammates eventually won out. He allowed just six hits, struck out nine and walked two.

The Indians were held to eight hits by Lefty Marius Russo, who had beaten them last week in Cleveland, but they scored in the second stanza on singles by Jeff Heath and Gee Walker and a force out to take control of the game early.

The Tribe never had two men on the bases at the same time again until the ninth inning when a double play rubbed them out.

Cards' Run In 9th Beats Giants, 3 to 2

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, May 13.—The St. Louis Cardinals snatched a 3-to-2 victory over the New York Giants today with a run in the ninth inning on an error, a sacrifice and Jim Brown's slashing single past first base.

Each team made seven hits, but two of the Redbirds' safeties were doubles by Johnny Mize with men on base, and were good for a run in the first inning, and another in the third to build up a two-run lead over Carl Hubbell.

Mort Cooper set down the Giants hitless for three innings and scoreless until the eighth, when a single by Johnny Rucker, a double by Burgess Whitehead, an error and a single by Hank Danning produced two runs to tie the score.

Dodgers Beat Reds, 4 to 3, for 6 in Row

Hugh Casey Registers Fifth Victory as Flock Opens Western Tour; Bucky Dalters Beaten

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, May 13.—The Dodgers made it six in a row today and Hugh Casey marked up his fifth straight victory as the National League leaders opened their first Western tour of the season by conquering the Cincinnati Reds, 4-3, before a scant crowd of 5,017.

The burly Brooklyn right-hander pitched six-hit ball and only twice gave as many as two hits in one frame. Those were the innings in which the Reds scored, but before they got their first two runs, the Dodgers already had nicked Bucky Walters for three and they were never behind. As a result of the victory, the Dodgers held their place at the top of the standings and stretched their margin over Cincinnati, tied with Boston for fourth place, to 9½ games.

Walters Never Recovers

Walters, who was held back from his regular pitching turn in order to oppose the Dodgers, got into trouble in the second inning and never recovered, although he pitched eight-hit ball. In the second, Joe Medwick opened with a single, Cookie Lavagetto doubled and Dolph Camilli drove out a long fly that brought in the first Brooklyn run.

Walters wild-pitched two more runs home in the next inning. Casey singled and Peewee Reese sacrificed him to second. Billy Herman drew a walk. Both advanced on Jim Wasdell's infield out and came running home when Walters let fly a wild pitch. The Dodgers collected their last run in the fifth on singles by Reese and Wasdell with Herman's infield out sandwiched between.

Reds Miss Chance

The Reds threatened in the fourth, scoring twice, but they failed to make the most of this chance and couldn't get another run until the ninth. Bill Werber opened the fourth with a double and scored on Linus Frey's single. A passed ball put Frey on third, but the next three batters went down and it took two outs to get Frey home. In the ninth the champs also failed to hit in a clutch after Frey had started with a double. Jim Ripple and Frank McCormick both went out before big Ernie Lombardi connected for a single to socre Frey.

Rigney Stops Bosox, 3 to 2, For Chicago

By the Associated Press

Boston, May 13.—John Dungan Rigney, who is expecting a call momentarily to join Uncle Sam's fighting forces, held the Boston Red Sox sluggers to four scattered hits today as the Chicago White Sox triumphed, 3-2, to vault into second place in the American League standings.

Rigney started the fireworks himself by drawing a pass in the third and then, with two away, Luke Appling sent him to second with a looper to center. Wagner slipped two strikes past Joe Kuhel, then lost him with a base on balls. Taft Wright scored Rigney and Appling with a slam to center, fast fielding holding the blow to a single.

John Dungan Rigney accounted for the third and winning run by doubling and romping home on Bill Knickerbocker's two-base wallop, in the seventh.

Claude Rippey One to Beat in Chevy Chase Tournament

1938-39 Champ Picked After Practice Rounds; Sherman, Taft Cups at Stake

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

The man who beats Claude Rippy will win the Chevy Chase Invitation tournament.

That was the consensus of the players who tested the carefully groomed course yesterday in the final practice rounds preceding the thirty-first renewal today of the famed invitation tournament for the Taft and Sherman trophies.

Rippy, the 1938 and '39 champion and recognized as one of the finest amateurs ever to hit Washington, played 27 holes and although he reported no score he was content with the way he hit the ball.

Course Jammed

The starting field was increased to 124 yesterday with a dozen post entries, the most prominent among them being Jesse Dowling, jr., of Baltimore; Jack Keefe, Kenwood's long-hitting representative, and Martin F. McCarthy, Columbia Club titlist.

The course was jammed all day yesterday as a majority of the contestants took advantage of the perfect weather for a full day's practice. Lowest scores reported were 73s by M. Parker Nolan and Dick Melvin.

Volney Burnett, the defending champion and one of six former champs in the field; Ralph Bogart, the two-time District champ, and Nolan, the Maryland titlest, were conceded the best chance of stopping Rippy. Other holders of the Taft trophy entered are B. Warren Corkran, Baltimore's 1913 winner; Harry G. Pitt, the only three-time crown wearer; Rippy, and the host club hopes, Dick Lunn and Ralph D. Quinter.

76 Score Necessary

Host pro Bob Barnett predicted a score of 76 or better would be necessary to make the championship flight while he did not think anyone would equal the par of 69 for medal honors. Last year Carolina's Bobby Dunkelberger took the course apart with a 67 despite a high wind but there is no player of Dunkelberger's caliber in the field.

Lionel Noah, jr., of Woodway, Conn.; George Coleman, Miami, Okla., and Jess Dowling, Baltimore, are the outstanding out-of-town threats along with Walter Pedersen, of New York. Frank Allan, the three-time finalist from Pittston, Pa., is missing this year for the first time in years.

Starting Times Listed

Starting times allotted the post entries include: 3 o'clock—Bernie Hallock and D. W. Smith, Kenwood; 11:20—Dowling and Burke Edwards, Manor; 1:40—McCarthy and Coleman; 10:10—J. I. Sassnet, Kenwood; 3:05—Lunn and Quinter; 9:05—Hal Roddy and H. Edwin Blair, Hagerstown; 12:15—Keele and R. W. Harvey, Kenwood. Gillie Young, A. H. Yando, E. A. Merkle and M. F. Morse were assigned additional times.

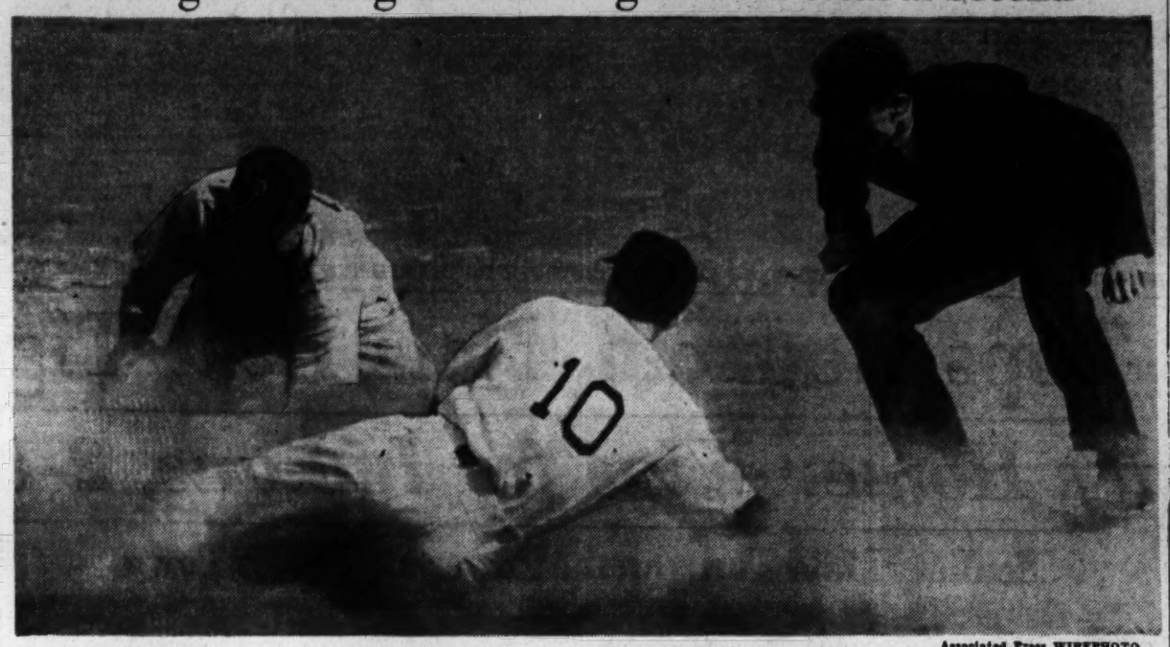
George Washington Case Negotiates a Steal at Second



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

A cloud of dust, George Case's well-known calling card, arises as George slides safely into second base on a steal after his single in the first inning of yesterday's game with Detroit. obstreperous in the fifth ining and blasted three runs across the plate to put themselves back in the ball game.

Ben Chapman reached base to open the inning when Frankie Croucher dropped his pop fly to short center after a long run. Jake Early breathed some life into the rally with a single to right that moved Chapman to third. Hudson popped out, but Case inserted his third straight left-field single at this point and a run scored. Cramer gounded out, but Vernon didn't. The young first baseman swatted the game's longest blow to the top of the right center fence and two runs scored to cut the Tigers' lead to 4-3.

Newsom didn't last out the sixth. He dug his own pitfall by walking Cecil Travis, and Jimmy Bloodworth moved the tying run to third with none out with a sharp single over second. Newsom was retired from the picture at this point, and Benton got the pitching job.

Benton's first act was to walk Chapman on four pitches to fill the bases. The tension was eased a bit for the Tigers when Rudy York's clever throw to the plate on Early's ground ball cut off a run. Hudson was permitted to bat for himself and laid a bunt down the first base line. Benton slipped while fielding the ball, and Bloodworth scooted home from third with the tying run ahead of the pitcher's shove-like throw to the plate. With only one out, Case's long fly to left moved Chapman home from third with the winning run.

Hudson had his only troubles in the second and third innning. He walked York to start the second and then hit Gehringer on the foot before getting anybody out. The Tigers scored a run without the aid of a hit when Higgins sacrified and Tebbetts delivered a long fly.

In the third inning, Hudson gave up three runs on only two Tiger hits. Newson himself opened the inning with a single past Travis and Hudson then botched Harris' bunt, both runners being safe. Bloodworth, in his haste to make a double play, neglected to field Mullins' ground ball and on the error Newsom scored and Harris moved to third. Bruce Campbell's double against the right field wall scored Harris, and York's long fly scored Mullins.

Thereafter, however, Hudson was very tough. He permitted only three Tigers to reach base in the last six innings, only one of them on a hit. Birdie Tebbetts' single to center in the sixth with one out was the first Detroit hit since the third inning and their last hit of the game. Hudson pitched very well, in fact.

Britain to Share Spotlight In Massachusetts Play Today

British War Relief Fund to Benefit; 36 Pros Start Medal Play at Brookline; Ouimet Back

By the United Press

Brookline, Mass., May 13.—When professional golfers return to the Country Club tomorrow after a 28-year lapse, Great Britain again will share the spotlight—but in a different way.

In 1913 Britain's famed pros, Harry Vardon and Ted Ray, battled to a a three-way deadlock with Amateur Francis Ouimet for the National Open title. The 20-year-old Ouimet created history in the subsequent playoff by annexing the championship.

OUIMET

Ouimet, now a Boston broker and part owner of the Botson Braves Baseball Club, will be on deck tomorrow as referee when a crack octet of pros start 36 holes of medal play in the first annual Massachusetts Golf Association Invitation Tournament. Englandland will not be represented in the competition, but net proceeds of the affair will be donated to the British War Relief Society.

Competing for $1,500 prize money with a $500 top, Byron Nelson and Harold (Jug) McSpaden will inaugurate the first round followed at 10-minute intervals by Sam Snead and Craig Wood, Jimmy Demaret and Lawson Little and Ben Hogan and Jimmy Thomson. After lunch and a driving contest, they will return to the links in this order: Nelson-Little, Wood-Thomson, Hogan-McSpaden and Snead-Demaret.

Hogan, the mechanical man of golf who was leading money winner and holder of the Vardon Trophy in 1940, rules the form favorite, but any of the others are capable of taking top honors. Hogan is the present leader in both departments and has averaged 70.44 in 47 rounds.

The slugging Snead, runnerup to Hogan in earnings and Vardon in points, rates second choice on the basis of four tournament wins. National Open Champion Little, who acquired his first National Amateur championship here in 1934, and Nelson, P. G. A. titlist and winner of the $12,000 Belmont Open, the last major tournament in this area, will receive plenty of backing.

Demaret, now a pro at Norton, Conn., "is the one to beat," according to McSpaden, professional at the nearby Winchester Country Club. McSpaden believes that "driving accuracy is going to pay off . . . and that's the kind of driver Demaret is—accurate."

All records for the course will be cracked, experts predict, despite the fact that only Little and McSpaden ever have played over the country club's 59-year-old layout, one of the Nation's oldest and most exclusive. Par for the 6,455-yard course is 71 with Amateur Johnny Fischer's 67 in 1936 and Ray's 70 in 1913 the lowest competitive cards.

King Pin Five Rolls 1,808 for First Place

Two new team leaders emerged after a full evening's firing last night in the thirty-first annual Washington City Duckpin Association Tournament at Lucky Strike.

In the unlimited class, King Pin five, of the District League, grabbed the top spot with a set of 1808, topped by Bill Miller's individual 403. And in Class A the G. P. O. team of the Men's Federal League turned in an 1841 for first place. That was the highest team set in the tourney to date, and Frank Mischou's 399 was the big contributing factor.

Bowling in the singles saw Sam Blaine jump intto third place with a 400 set in Class B and Jimmy Burns take seventh in the same section with 383.

Mattos A. C. Routs Motors, 13-3

Mattos A. C. routed the Village Motors A. C. last night at Ballston Stadium to maintain its undefeated record. The score was Mattos, 13; Village, 3.

Bill Gillen, of Mattos, pitched a six-hit game, striking out 10 men.

Cubs 'Walked' To Victory, Fourth Place

By the Associated Press

Chicago, May 13.—The Chicago Cubs "walked" two flights up into fourth place today when Hank Leiber drew a pass with the bases loaded and the score tied in the seventh inning for a 4-to-3 homecoming victory over the Boston Braves.

Tom Early, third Boston pitcher, walked Leiber, who earlier had hit a two-run homer.

Jake Mooty, who succeeded Vern Olsen after the Braves tied the score at 3-all with three runs in the fifth, was the winning pitched. He shut out the Braves with three singles the last four and two-thirds innings.

Two pinch hits, a double by Don Manno and a single by Phil Nasi, drove in the Boston runs.

The victory gave the Cubs a string of three for the first time this season and adjusted their recent record to five victories in six starts.

Ho, Hum! Pirates Beat Phils, 6 to 3

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, May 13.—The Pittsburgh Pirates and the Philadelphia Phillies staged a bargain basement baseball game today with the Pirates staggering home in front, 6-3.

The victory ended a four-game famine for Pittsburgh and was the Phils' fifth straight reverse. Only 986 fans, one of the smallest crowds in years at Forbes Fild, saw the drab contest.

Baltimore will not be at top strength as both Mrs. T. E. Schluderberg and Mrs. Jerome Sloman will miss the match.

Fishing with JACK BELL

Mountain trout streams are still very low—dangerously low—and the rain during the past week has not helped at all. Danger from forest fires has been reduced, however.

Big Hunting Creek is still being fished heavily for the big ones stocked two weeks ago, but very few are caught and we don't believe they will be until we have some heavy rain and an appreciable rise in the streams—then watch out!

Trouting on Fishing Creek over the weekend was like fishing on one's own private stream.

JACK BELL

Over the weekend salt water fishing on Chesapeake Bay was for rough riders only. Conditions generally should improve this week and we look for good catches.

Rock fish are being caught on the Potomac, not many but keepers around 3 pounds. It is strange that more anglers don't try for them, but the spirit of adventure is so strong it lures you farther away from home and quite frequently you pass something up.

There are plenty of row boats available and no license is required to fish below Chain Bridge. Bait up on a 5/0 or 6/0 hook, a piece of herring. A June bug spinner ahead helps things along.

The time has passed when we can sit back and say "The sea is big and there are more fish in it than we can ever catch." The sea is large . . . it does have countless millions of fish, but it is surprising to all of us when we stop to think that it has stood up as well as it has under the tremendous annual toll which improved methods of catching, faster shipment and refrigeration have taken of its resources.

Take the striped bass or rock fish, for example. It is one of America's choicest and most sought-after game and food fish. It is distinctly a coastal species which thrives in warm or cold, salt or brackish, or fresh waters. They are seldom taken far at sea and seem to remain near shore or in brackish bays from which they swim up fresh waters to spawn . . . these migrations for spawning make the species particularly vulnerable to attack by fishermen both commercial and sports.

Dr. Daniel Merriman, who has devoted years of extensive study to this one species, points out that "it appears that probably a few of the female bass become mature at the end of their third year; the majority attain maturity at the end of the fourth year." This means that rock fish do not spawn until they have reached a length of 18 or 20 inches. Therefore, when commercial fishermen and sportsmen take rock fish smaller than that they are catching fish which have not had a chance to reproduce to assure a supply for the future.

So intensive is the fishing that in the Chesapeake Bay, for example, most of the rock fish are marketed at the smallest commercial size known as "Pan Rock." This leaves us to believe that to assure the future of rock fishing for the sportsman and the commercial fisherman on the Atlantic Coast, there should be either Federal or State laws which will protect this fish until they have reached at least an 18-inch length.

It's a fine state of affairs when California can introduce a native Atlantic fish and have foresight enough to protect this fish, produce more and better fish than is the case here on the Atlantic.

If the commercial fishermen had shown foresight and regulated the rock fisheries sensibly, no one would have any objection. But there is no indication that they are doing anything; rather the idea seems to be to grab as much as possible.

Under these circumstances, it seems justifiable that a regular size be made uniform in all producing States and should be that which will permit the bulk of the supply to reach maturity and spawn at least once; a size which will yield the commercial fisherman more money for his catch and the sportsman better sport.

Commercial fishermen should take precautionary measures against ordinary destruction of the undersized immature fish, and the sportsmen should retain only such fish as they need for immediate consumption, but remember that the sport is in the catching not the killing . . . and release every single fish you cannot use. This is one form of conservation in which everyone of us can profitably engage.

We do not expect anyone to turn back all his fish. We enjoy baked rock fish or rock fish steaks as well as the next fellow, and we like to bring home a mess of fish, but when we bring home a big catch and begin to distribute them, we hate to hear some one say, "Oh! they're not cleaned," as we heard not so long ago.

Glenn W. Kennedy, of 3446 Connecticut Avenue Northwest, dug back into his memory for a 14-year-old fishing tale about the beloved Will Rogers and consequently comes up the winner of the $5 weekly prize offered by Jack Bell, The Post fishing editor, for the best tall tale of your fishing career. Mail your experiences to Jack Bell, Fishing Editor, The Washington Post, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Bell:

When Will Rogers was visiting Lake Kemp in 1927, I was fishing near him one day, and soon joined the crowd gathered to see an unusual fishing experience. When he would drop his line at exactly the same spot, it would immediately be jerked under and the line would be snapped neatly. Two inches either way was no good—but when he hit that exact spot—the loss was repeated. An investigation disclosed a sunken wine cask—and an axe revealed a full grown hardhead fish inside the cask. The fish had become a prisoner in some fashion inside the barrel when young, had lived and grown, and the exxact spot where Mr. Rogers was dropping his line was the open bung-hole of the cask.

Mr. Rogers took one look at the fish, and exclaimed, "I've caught lots of hardhead, but that's the first time I ever hooked one 'aged in wood'".

Pennant Chances: Rookie Crop Main Problem of Major Clubs As Deadline for Roster Reducing Nears

By Bob Considine

This is the third of a series of articles by Bob Considine, previewing the potential pennant winners of the 1941 baseball season.

New York, May 13.—Youth must be served, 'tis said, but a batch of them will be served only with their notices May 15. That is heartache day in the major leagues. It is the day when the clubs must cut down their rosters to 25 players. It is the day when rookies who for one reason or another have failed to make good are sent back to the provinces and to the bush leagues, to serve out another wearying apprenticeship.

Many were called this year. But at midnight May 15 comparatively few will be chosen to take their regular places in big league line-ups. The ones who failed not because they didn't have the stuff but because of "pressing," the baseball equivalent of stagefright. Another year in the minors will give most of them the necessary poise, but for some it will mean that they'll never get another chance to get up where the dough is big and the opportunities many. They will have blown their last chance.

Only Two Spring Buds Have Bloomed

The three most-discussed 1941 rookies at the start of the season were Lou Novikoff, of the Cubs; Phil Rizzuto and Gerry Priddy, of the Yankees. To date, Novikoff and Priddy have been dismal failures. They were magnificent minor leaguers, valued at as much as $100,000 cash if they had been placed on the open market.

Novikoff was the best Pacific Coast slugger in years, had led three minor leagues in hitting, but he has been finding it difficult to borrow or beg a hit in the big show. The weakness which minor league pitchers could not find in the armor of the mad Russian apparently is all too obvious to the seasoned big league hurlers. Priddy's case is in parallel. Each has had trouble batting as much as .200, which is tantamount to hopeless ineptitude.

Rizzuto has shown to better advantage. He has yet to reach the .300 batting class which was freely predicted for him. But he has been close enough, and his fielding has been beyond reproach. He has definitely made good.

By and large the Cards have come up with a record-breaking crop of youngsters this year. So many, in fact, that Manager Billy Southworth has a real problem on his hands deciding which he must cut loose by midnight May 15. But the Cards also know the bad feeling of having a highly touted rookie go bad. He is Harry Walker, outfielding kid brother of the Dodgers' veteran Dixie Walker. He needs much more ripening. His case, however, is overshadowed by the spectacular work of Frank Crespi and Pitchers John Gornicki, John Grodzicki and Sam Nahem, and Walker Cooper, dazzling young catcher who has hit more than .350 through the early pennant race.

Crespi has brilliantly solved the Cards' ancient infield problem. His sensational playing at second base has enabled Southworth to move Jimmy Brown to third, a natural position for this former Card second baseman. Atop this, Crespi has been slapping the ball at better than a .330 clip through the season to date. He must be held largely responsible for the fact that the Cards have now been posted as favorites to win the National League pennant.

Conflicting schedules gave Tech High diamonders a choice between Western and Eastern as foes in the interhigh baseball series yesterday, and unfortunately they picked the latter.

The White Tide won. 8-2, as Kenny Curles pitched one of the best games of his career at the Trainer Stadium. And in so doing the White Tide, perennial power in the public school race until 1939, captured undisputed first place in the standings. Tech dropped from serious contention to fifth place.

Meanwhile, at Wilson the host club suffered a 7-2 setback at the hands of Roosevelt in another interhigh scrap. The victory earned fourth place for the Riders and sent Wilson to the bottom.

Easterners Hit Hard

Curles' seven-hit performance made a lot of difference in Eastern's triumph, but it wouldn't have sufficed without the slugging of Tide batters. Chief among these was stocky Billy Hite, a second baseman moved to the outfield. He hung up Eastern's first run in the second inning on a 400-feet homer, got another four-bagger in the eighth and wound up with four hits for five times at bat. A few of his incidental marks were four runs scored, five trips to first base and two stolen bases.

Garner Gives Up 6 Hits to Wilson

Billy Garner, left-hander, provided Roosevelt its second interhigh victory in four games and a faint chance of earning the playoff when he set Wilson sluggers down with six hits. He fanned 12 batsmen, but was worked for 7 walks.

After a scoreless first frame, the Riders started moving in the second with a trio of runs. They added two more in the fourth and from there in the outsome was never in doubt.

Two doubles apiece by Dick Koester and Al Buschling and one by Bill Sturges featured Roosevelt's nine-hit attack. Schwab and Hardison slammed doubles for the losers.

Little Generals Nose Out Central, 5 to 4

It took 11 innings to do it, but Washington-Lee High nine, of Arlington, successfully avenged an earlier 8-3 beating by Central yesterday, grabbing a 5-4 decision over the Vikings in a clash at the winners' diamond.

Big Ed Johnson, the moundsman Central chased in the first meeting, came back to win his own game yesterday. With the bases loaded as a result of two walks and a Viking error in the eleventh, Johnson laid down a perfect bunt that sent Eddie DeCelle racing across the plate with the winning run.

Cause Is Lost

Johnson's cause was apparently lost when Central held a 4-1 lead as W.-L. came to bat in the eighth. However "Shanty" Shepherd, Post All-Metropolitan catcher, saved the day then. Two mates were on base when he smashed a home run that eventually sent the game into extra innings.

Wilkerson started for Central but Shepherd's eighth inning blow finished him. He allowed 11 of the Little Generals' 12 hits and Aaron Weisenberg the other, Johnson's bunt.

The victory brought Washington-Lee's record to 12 won and 5 lost.

It's Hillbilly Night Tomorrow At Turner's Arena

Elvira Snodgrass, the Smoky Mountain (Tenn.) hillbilly, will be shooting for a chance to meet Mildred Burke, the recognized feminine wrestling champion, on tomorrow night's show at Turner's Arena.

Elvira learned from Promoter Joe Turner that if she defeated Betty LaVerne, the New Mexico cowgirl, in the headline bout, a match with Champion Burke will be hers in a few weeks.

Fred (Legs) Grobmier, the spidery Des Moines, Iowa, farmer, was matched yesterday against Andy Meixner, a former sailor, in a 30-minute bout.

Len Macaluso, erstwhile Colgate All-American, will meet Paul Boesch, of Los Angeles, in a special added attraction. Elvira's husband will oppose Wild Man Zim in another scrap.

Hans Kampfer and Milo Steinborn, two stars who once held European titles, will met in the "battle of science."

Roosevelt, Little Hoya Golfers Win

Roosevelt and Georgetown Prep, leaders in the Interhigh and Private School sections of the D. C. Schoolboy Golf League, respectively, continued their winning ways yesterday with easy victories. The first trampled Western, 9-0, and the Little Hoyas downed Devitt Prep by the same margin.

In only one match were Roosevelt players forced as far as the sixteenth hole. Preston Wannan defeated Western's Young in that one, 3 and 2. Devitt, without Earle Skinker, was never a match for the Little Hoyas, forfeiting one of its points.

Two forfeits by Tech gave Anacostia a 6-3 decision in another match, after the first two foursomes had split. Wilson downed Central, 7-2, and Gonzaga smashed out an 8-1 triumph over St. Albans.

Pomary, Palumbo Up, Takes Ranson Purse at Charles Town

Transday Beats Out Schley Al

Veteran Jockey Wins Feature With Smart Saddle Work; Winner Pays His Backers $8

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Charles Town, W. Va., May 13.—Jockey Sammy Palumbo, as much at home at this track as the eighth pole, gave one of his top rides to Pomary, a 5-year-old daughter of Pompey, and the mare won the Ranson Purse, featuring today's program. Palumbo, who is not getting any younger, showed that he retains his skill, hereabouts at any rate, by winning the race going to the first turn.

He gave Pomary the hustling she needed to take the lead and then kept her under pressure all the way to score by a length and a half over W. B. Pendlebury's Transday. This gelding gained the place by a neck margin over Schley Al, owned by R. A. Bowman, jr., and the favorite in the field of eight going the 6½-furlong route.

Pomary was performing in the Maryland colors of Mrs. H. S. Horkheimer and was saddled by J. Bowes Bond, popular Baltimore trainer. She paid an $8 mutuel and was clocked in 1:20 3-5 over a fast track. It was another beautiful day for racing here in the mountains. About 5,000 customers took part in the sport.

Thanks to Palumbo's determined handling going to the first turn, Pomary was able to hold a lead over Schley Al. Jockey George Watson rode hard on the favorite, but the horse just wasn't equal to the task of catching the front runner. In the stretch, Jockey Herb Claggett got Transday going, and the son of Transmute closed with a bold rush to take the place.

Trainer Everett Brining started the day with two winners. In the first race, he saddled Mowmet, a newcomer to racing and a son of Mowlee. Mowmet, under Willie Kelly's handling, finished in front of Myrtle M. and Prison Ship. The 2-year-old paid $11.80.

Brining sent his own Marandan, with Palumbo up, to the post in the second race, and this 4-year-old filly proved the best of the lot. She had Red Idol and Pushkin closest to her at the end. Her price was $9.60, and she set the stage for a $178.20 daily double. Last Scamp completing the transaction by winning the third race. Last Scamp, well ridden by Jockey Martin Bletzacker, paid $19.40 to win.

Dear Al:

Just why somebody did not register an objection after yesterday's fourth race probably never will be known. An accident was narrowly averted at the first turn. In the stretch, Jockey C. Kirk rode Scullery Maid, the favorite, right over Strumming and Palumbo had to stand up in the saddle. Palumbo seldom claims a foul against any rider but this was a time that he owed it to those who bet on his horse. The Trainers' Guild will hold a meeting tonight in the Jefferson Hotel. Jockey Douglas (Tommy-Hawk) West got in from Louisville yesterday. He says he can make 109 pounds and he's ready to ride them all hard and handsome. Those flamingoes in the infield haven't moved since the meeting opened, so I guess they must be phonies. At any rate, they won't do as the first flock of flamingoes did at Hialeah. They flew back to the jungles. Now Hialeah keeps their wings clipped. Jockey Leon Garrett is leaving this weekend for Wheeling. He has horses to get ready for the meeting at that point. I'm getting a little tired of Jockey Eddie Arcaro being quoted as saying he was left at the post in the Preakness. Is the boy trying to blame Starter Milton for going to sleep? The gate opened for Whirlaway and if he was slow getting out of there, couldn't it have been Arcaro's fault? Arcaro was in No. 1 post position and he was right under Starter Milton's nose. If his horse wasn't ready it was up to him to tell Milton so. But why should we be worrying about ancient history with the $1,000 Charleston Handicap on today's card. Russell Oakes and Walter Haight will broadcast the race over Station WINX at 4:45 p. m. See you on the rail.

BILL.

First race—LULU KHAYYAM has her speed and will be hard to beat at this short sprint route. Needs only the right handling. BALKANESE may find this distance too short but is reported fit. LEAD PLEASE for the minor award.

Second race—PRINCESS LADY will be hard to beat in this. She promises to make the most of the inside post position. **

Power Sales Here Up 15% During April

Sales of the Potomac Electric Power Co. scored a substantial upturn in April, the report filed with the Public Utilities Commission revealed yesterday.

April sales this year totaled 77,422,857 kilowatt hours, against 67,228,230 kilowatt hours in April, 1940, or an increase of 15.2 per cent.

For the first four months, power sales compared as follows (in kilowatt hours):

	1941	1940
January	78,538,087	71,130,014
February	76,638,978	68,831,620
March	79,826,879	69,008,918
April	77,422,857	67,228,230

Credit Men Hear Foulke

More than 90 credit men and officials of leading Washington department stores yesterday heard Roy A. Foulke, financial analyst, discuss suggestions for the balance sheet of the future. Mr. Foulke, who is associated with Dun & Bradstreet, spoke at a luncheon meeting of the Washington Association of Credit Men in the Woodward & Lothrop tearoom.

After describing proposals for standardization of accounting practices, Mr. Foulke lauded the New York Stock Exchange's action some years back in requiring companies whose stock is listed to make annual reports to stockholders.

William A. Bowman, president of the local credit group, presided at the gathering.

Six Agents Honored

Six local representatives of the Mutual Life Insurance Co., of New York were honor guests at a luncheon Monday in the university. The sextette, because of fine sales records, will attend a convention June 26 and 27 in Colorado Springs.

Maurice Salomon won the highest honor, having qualified for membership in the President's Luncheon Club. Edgar R. Baturin, Robert Goldstein and Paul H. Primm qualified for the Quarter of a Million Dollar Club. J. A. Kamerow and George A. Anadale qualified as delegates. All are associated with the Thomas P. Morgan, jr., agency.

Comptrollers to Hear Nathan

Robert R. Nathan, of Washington, will be one of the speakers at the comptrollers' congress of National Retail Dry Goods Association in Chicago, June 2 to 5. Mr. Nathan is associated with the Office of Production Management, bureau of research and statistics. He will speak on "Retailing Under the Impetus of Increased Purchasing Power."

Canada Records Biggest Wheat Sale In World's History

Ottawa, Ontario, May 13 (Canadian Press).—The Canadian wheat board has sold the United Kingdom ministry of food 120,000,000 bushels of wheat futures for delivery during the period ending May, 1942, Trade Minister J. A. MacKinnon announced today.

The sale constitutes the largest single wheat transaction in the history of the world's grain trade, the minister said.

Last August the ministry purchased 100,000,000 bushels of wheat from the board for future delivery. Prices for the latest sale were not mentioned, but last August sales were reported to be at slightly higher than market levels.

McKesson Plan Hearing Slated

New York, May 13 (AP).—United States District Court Judge Alfred C. Coxe has set May 15 for a hearing to consider confirmation of a plan of reorganization for McKesson & Robbins, the big drug firm which went into receivership as a result of the manipulations of the late Philip Coster-Musica.

Judge Coxe set the date after William J. Wardall, trustee, presented evidence that the plan recently submitted to security holders and creditors at the order of the court had received overwhelming approval. Votes in favor of the plan by the various classes of creditors and holders ranged upward from 97.2 per cent.

Nazi Iron Grip Seen Choking Geese That Lay Golden Eggs

Germans, Victims Live Off Capital From Europe's Larder

(Third in a series about Germany's economic gains.)

By Merryle Stanley Rukeyser,
International News Service Staff Writer.

Although embattled totalitarian Germany in its economic scheme deliberately sacrifices "butter" in order to get guns, it obviously cannot afford to neglect the national bread basket.

Nevertheless, even before the new access of captive nations, the Third Reich was more nearly self-sufficient in respect to foodstuffs than the United Kingdom of Great Britain. Germany was able to produce at the beginning of this war 82 per cent of her domestic requirements as compared with 80 per cent in 1909 and 1913.

However, the old Reich had begun to approach the limits of her own potential agricultural expansion. In fact, studies by the United States Department of Agriculture indicate that she showed a net loss in her agricultural area during the last seven years. As a result of the inroads on farm lands by airdromes, barracks, and the building of new wide national highways.

Conquests to Fill Larder

The motive for conquering the Scandinavian nations and the Low Countries is closely related to the objective of freeing the enlarged Reich from dependence on overseas sources of essential foodstuffs.

Denmark is the primary butter producer, and before German occupation met about one-fourth of the import needs of the United Kingdom. Germany now, of course, has first call on the butter production of Denmark. By last summer, Danish milk production, according to the United States Department of Agriculture, was 21 per cent less than in the corresponding period in the previous year, and butter output was down at least 9 per cent.

Disturbances in occupied countries have cut off Swiss sources of butter supply from Denmark and of fresh milk from France. Switzerland, it is understood, has nevertheless been a heavy supplier of canned milk and cheese to Germany, which have been swapped for German coal and iron.

Sweden, which is still independent, has, like Switzerland, been drawn by the trend of events more closely within the Nazi economic orbit. Similarly subjected to insufficient supplies of livestock feed, Swedish output of butter is reported to be down about 40 per cent.

Eggs From Belgium

In World War I, Belgium suffered acutely from inability to get eggs. After the war, it systematically brought poultry into the country, and before World War II got under way it was a surplus producer of these commodities, and was making substantial net exports of eggs.

At the time of German occupation, Denmark had 14 per cent more hogs than the year previous, but the shutting off of feed imports and edicts against using domestic rye and wheat for the animals may have cut the hog population by as much as 30 per cent.

Net changes in the last two decades in the hog situation thus far apparently leave the continent of Europe better off than in 1918 at the end of the first World War, during which the hog population slumped 30 per cent.

The Netherlands, at the time of the German occupation, had increased the herd of cattle by 2 per cent over the previous year, but it since has felt the pinch incidental to shutting off of imported feedstuffs. As a result, the country has been forced to use up capital through premature reduction of herds, thus creating a temporary increase in beef supplies.

Meat from Netherlands

Next to Denmark, the Netherlands is normally the largest exporter of animal products in Europe. Industrially, Holland has been preeminent in diamond cutting, shipbuilding, processing chocolate, margarine, tobacco and in producing beer and gin.

Belgium's coal supplies have enabled her to develop along industrial lines, but she is vitally dependent on access to the world markets for raw materials. Both of the Low Countries normally depend on their colonies as sources of raw materials for industry and agriculture.

In envisaging the current void of supplies in Europe, it should not be overlooked that before the blockade the United States was sending $1,200,000,000 worth of exports to Europe, two-fifths of our total shipments. Nearly half of our European sales represented raw and semimanufactured commodities. Almost two-thirds of our sales to continental Europe, excluding Russia, consisted of raw cotton, petroleum and products, machinery, automobiles and copper.

Thus, while the blockade prevails, Germany cannot at present draw on the full potentials of the Northern European captive states, although its position of military dominance enables it to divert essential foodstuffs at the expense of the pepole in the overrun nations.

TOMORROW: The contribution which occupied France makes to the totalitarian dream of a self-contained axis area.

America's Stake In New Europe

Aggregate American exports to Europe in the prewar period (1936 to 1938) averaged about $1,200,000,000. This amounted to about 40 per cent of our total exports. Almost 50 per cent of American exports to Europe consisted of raw and semimanufactured articles.

The record of two-way trade between the United States and European countries individually follows:

East Central, South Central and West Central were up 28.4, 14.2 and 10.2 per cent, respectively, with $34,974,603 during April, 1941, and $27,974,603 during April, 1941, and 27,241,314 for the like month in 1940 for the East Central States: South Central $1,539,055 in April, 1941, and $10,101,035 in April, 1940, and in April, 1941, West Central permits were $8,747,374 and in the same period, 1940, were $7,940,701.

The Mountain States were down 27.1 per cent with $3,516,341 for April, 1941, and $4,824,393 for the same month in 1940.

Cotton, Wheat Surge Higher On Loan Step

By the Associated Press

Commodities again traced a rising price curve yesterday after Monday's backward step under impact of the Agriculture Department's latest implied warning of action against overspeculation.

Principal staples in the division of "basic crops"—wheat and cotton—moved far ahead of the field on the upturn.

At the close in the New York Cotton Exchange futures were around the day's highs, $2.40 to $2.85 above previous finals. Chicago wheat closed up 1⅝ to 2 cents a bushel. Corn was ⅞ to 1⅛ cents higher.

Active speculative and consumer buying of both cotton and wheat was attributed to further legislative steps pointing to early adoption of the long-pending measure to provide Government loans on these and some other "basic" farm staples at 85 per cent of parity prices.

A number of New York and Chicago futures markets responded strongly to their wide climb. These were most prominent in the New York list: Cottonseed oil, up .19 to .30 of a cent a pound; wool tops, some contracts up .08 of a cent; hides, up .13 to .28 of a cent. Rubber and cocoa for forward delivery were a shade lower.

The Associated Press weighted index of 35 wholesale spot staples resumed its rise to a new four-year high, closing at $4.14 per cent of the 1926 average compared with 83.50 per cent Monday.

Earnings Reports

Richfield Oil Corp. and subsidiaries reported net income for the March quarter of 1941 of $732,442, equal to 18 cents a share on the capital stock, as compared with $947,550, equal to 24 cents a share in the like period of 1940.

Merck & Co., Inc., manufacturing chemists, reported net income for the quarter ended March 31 of $1,057,481, equal, after preferred dividend requirements, to 1.09 a share on 900,000 shares of common outstanding after a recent three-for-one split-up. The net income was after reserve of $1,140,419 for Federal and Canadian taxes. No comparative figures were available.

Pressed Steel Car Co., Inc., reported net income for the March quarter of $138,473, equal, after quarterly dividend requirements on preferred stocks, to 16 cents a share on 566,923 common shares. This compared with $436,914 for the March quarter, 1940, equal to 72 cents a share on 536,509 common shares.

Firm Offers Extra Pay In Lieu of Vacation

Huntington, W. Va., May 13 (AP).—The International Nickel Co. of Canada, Ltd., world's largest producer of nickel, announced today it had asked its nonsalaried employes in the United States to accept a bonus of one week's pay instead of the customary week's vacation to help the defense program.

The company said it was acting at the request of the Office of Production Management.

The announcement said employes accepting would receive vacation pay equal to one week's wages in addition to regular pay.

N. J. Standard Net Soars To $123,886,346 in Year

By the Associated Press

New York, May 13.—Standard Oil Co. (New Jersey) reported today consolidated net income for 1940 of $123,886,346—the second largest earnings in its history and surpassed only in 1937.

This figure compared with $89,128,756 in 1939 and $147,933,147 in the 1937 record year.

Last year's net income was equal to $4.54 a capital share. In 1939 the company earned the equivalent of $3.26 a share while in 1937 the earnings equaled $5.64 a share.

W. S. Farish, president, said that the war reduced the former great export market but "was largely responsible for a spurt in business at home."

After describing the difficulties of operations in Europe, where, he said, control of subsidiaries "has been assumed by those in power," Farish stated:

"Standard Oil Co. (N. J.), as an American corporation, owes its first duty to the United States.

"It has kept the Department of State fully informed, and has cooperated closely with the department in all matters of foreign policy.

"So long as this country maintains normal relations with the rest of the world, the company must also carry on its operations in a normal manner. The company cannot constitute itself judge of the rights and wrongs of international problems.

"It cannot impose embargoes nor break them, these being the functions of government, not of industry.

"The immediate responsibility of management is to employ all of the facilities and skill of the organization to further industrial and military preparedness.

"The industry is in position to meet any demand for oil products which the governmental authorities have forecast for us.

"If physical limitations on our ability to supply these requirements should arise, it would seem most probable that they will result from a shortage of ships caused by diversion or requisition of tanker tonnage, and the lack of sufficient alternative transportation facilities."

Farish said the company, through its research program, is ready with production of new oil-chemical products such as synthetic superfuels for aviation, alcohols, toluol for explosives and synthetic rubber.

Light Selling Depresses Stock Prices Despite Bulge in Commodity Markets

New York, May 13.—The stock market struggled feebly to hold a mild early rally today, but light selling after mid-day converted initial gains of fractions to a point or so into declines in many cases at the close.

Wall Street tried to read bullish implications in the mysterious flight of Nazi Chieftain Hess from Germany, but buyers were notably hesitant in risking much cash on their interpretations. Another restraining inuence, brokers said, was the cancelation of the President's scheduled speech tomorrow. Not being able to find an answer to this, the inclination was to trim commitments or keep purchases at a minimum.

Some bidding was attributed to favorable business items, but more labor controversies threatening defense work served as an offset.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was unchanged at 40. Transfers totaled 431,850 shares compared with 435,320 yesterday.

One of the highlights of the financial picture was a bulge in agricultural commodities as indications pointed to quick passage by Congress of the bill for 85 per cent parity loans on farm products. Cotton jumped $2.40 to $2.85 a bale to the highest levels since 1937 when the House voted quick approval of the loan measure. Wheat at Chicago was up 1⅝ to 2 cents a bushel and corn ⅞ to 1⅛ cents higher. The British brought 120,000,000 bushels of Canadian wheat futures, a record order.

Steels and rails, among stocks, weakened at the last with U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Santa Fe, New York Central and Southern Pacific ending well under water. Other losers included Anaconda, U. S. Rubber, Montgomery Ward, American Telephone, Union Carbide, Consolidated Edison and U. S. Gypsum.

Atlantic Coast Line registered a new high for the year and ended up ¾ at 20⅞ when the road disclosed first quarter net of $4.07 a share against 92 cents in the like period of 1940. Union Pacific also retained a modest gain.

DuPont was up 2 points and lesser improvement was shown for Westinghouse, American Can, Douglas Aircraft, J. I. Case, International Harvester, Western Union, Standard Oil of New Jersey and Kennecott. General Motors and Chrysler was unchanged. Western Union directors, after the close, voted a dividend of $1 a share on the common, the same as disbursed in December.

Ahead in a spotty Curb were Humble Oil, Gulf Oil, New Jersey Zinc and American Gas. On the offside were Babcock & Wilcox, Aluminium, Ltd., Lake Shore and Pittsburgh Plate Glass. Volume here approximated 75,000 shares versus 68,000 Monday.

Selling influences halted a quiet advance among bonds and brought a majority of minus signs into the lists at the close. Few losses ran more than minor fractions. The minor sell-off paralleled the late downturn in stocks. Transactions totaled only $7,787,200, face value, compared with $8,395,050 yesterday.

Chief action centered on some of the communications and coal companies' issues, largely because of earnings prospects as a result of war efforts. Not all these securities showed gains, however.

United States Governments showed general firmness, rising around 2-32 point over the counter in moderate dealings. The new taxable 2½s sold at 104. In the stock exchange, the Treasuries were quoted up 9-32 points to off 12-32, bringing them into line with dealers' prices.

Food Sales Reported 15% Heavier in May

New York, May 13 (AP).—The upward trend of food sales and food prices has swelled the dollar volume of food distributors' sales substantially in May, the American Institute of Food Distribution, Inc., said today.

Reports of members indicate food sales of retail stores are running close to 15 per cent above 1940, the institute said. Larger gains are being shown by aggressive markets and in some rural and armament centers.

Stores featuring meats and fresh produce report the biggest increases.

Southern Railway Places Orders

Atlanta, May 13 (AP).—The Southern Railway has placed three orders totaling $12,275,000 for 4,025 all-steel freight cars for "delivery as fast as possible," R. B. Pegram, vice president, announced today.

To Investors Interested in Reorganization Railroad Bonds
The reorganization railroad situation offers certain outstanding possibilities in which many investors not content with their present lot will, we believe, be interested.
Such carriers offer unusual opportunities today because:
1. Drastic reduction in debt and accompanying lowering of fixed interest charges are provided for in reorganization plans.
2. Important maturities, frequently the cause of the carriers' financial troubles in the past, are eliminated for the next twenty or thirty years.
In addition, the excess profits tax naturally focuses attention on those companies not subject to heavy levies — and this category includes reorganization railroads.
Particularly do these individual opportunities exist among railroads which have suffered heavily in the past and which, due to the heavy traffic requirements of the moment, now bid fair to emerge from the doldrums. With net operating income mounting and interest on bond indebtedness now being earned for the first time in many years, senior obligations of railroads which are about to undergo, or have undergone, reorganization offer unusual opportunities to the alert investor.
We shall be glad to send you our Reorganization Rail Portfolio containing complete analyses of the five reorganization railroad bonds which appear most attractive at the present time. But please remember that these bonds, despite the favorable possibilities, remain essentially speculative.

Ickes Refuses To Sell Alcoa U. S. Electricity

Supported by President Roosevelt's express desire to promote Government-owned aluminum plants, Secretary of Interior Ickes has refused an OPM request to sell additional Columbia River power to the Aluminum Co. of America, it was learned yesterday on high authority.

The result is that the OPM is drafting plans for Federal plants to provide what will probably be a major part of the ultimate doubling of aluminum production made necessary by the enlarged aircraft program.

The Government plants, to be located in the Bonneville-Grand Coulee Dam areas and possibly also in the Tennessee Valley, may be operated and managed by Alcoa and the Reynolds Metal Co., a newcomer in the aluminum production industry. The set-up, it is believed, will be similar to that of the Government-owned tank arsenal in Detroit, managed by the Chrysler Corporation.

Out to Break Monopoly

It is known that Ickes favors operations of the projected aluminum plants after the present emergency as the only way of breaking the Alcoa monopoly.

The history of the decision to provide Government plants, as learned by The Post, is as follows:

About a month ago, the OPM determined to obtain an increase of about 200,000,000 pounds of aluminum annually over presently scheduled production of about 800,000,000 pounds. Sources of power were found for all but abuot 30,000,000 pounds.

William L. Batt, duputy director of the OPM production division, wrote Ickes asking that this power, from the Columbia River dams, be sold to Alcoa.

Alcoa Wants Option

Taking Batt's request to the White House, Ickes promptly replied that he had discussed the matter with Mr. Roosevelt and that "the President is in favor" of the Government building plants to produce aluminum, using power from Bonneville and Grand Coulee Dams.

Biggest hitch in the program at present is Alcoa's desire either to have the option of buying the Federal plants after the emergency, or, at a bare minimum, of obtaining an agreement that the Government will not produce aluminum in competition with Alcoa after the war.

Ickes is known to be adamant against granting either of these concessions. He has said that if Alcoa declines to accept a management contract, the Government itself will operate the plants.

'I'm American' Rally Plans Are Complete

Completion of arrangements for an impressive "I Am an American" rally Sunday night in the Departmental Auditorium was announced yesterday.

Solicitor General Francis Biddle will give the main address on the program, which will be a celebration of American citizenship, particularly by those who have been naturalized within the last year.

The exercises here will be one of several hundred to be held simultaneously in all parts of the Nation. Observance of "I Am an American Day"—the third Sunday in May—was urged by President Roosevelt in a recent proclamation.

About 1,000 Here

In Washington alone approximately 1,000 men and women have been naturalized since last May, most of whom will attend the Departmental Auditorium program, which will begin at 8 p. m. The auditorium is at Constitution Avenue and Thirteenth Street Northwest.

Twenty-six organizations are cosponsoring the event. Five thousand invitations have been mailed. Features will include music by the Navy Band Orchestra and the Americanization School Association Band, choral numbers by the men's glee club of Wilson Teachers College and a massing of the colors by the American Legion Guard of Honor and other groups.

'They Need 'Em and I'm Going,' Says 1st Doctor Off for Britain

A lanky Yankee, Dr. Howard R. Ives, strolled quietly into American Red Cross headquarters yesterday, and became America's first physician to announce himself ready, in response to the British Red Cross appeal for 1,000 doctors.

With a taciturnity that was unconsciously dramatic, Dr. Ives said under questioning:

"They need 'em and I'm going."

A 30-year-old surgeon at Mayo Clinic, Rochester, Minn., Dr. Ives unraveled a lot of red tape to prepare for a trip abroad. He stopped in Washington to confer with Red Cross officials before going to Portland, Me., to say goodby to his mother.

First to Come Here

Red Cross officials said only a fraction of 927 physicians making inquiries concerning the British appeal have filed completed applications. Dr. Ives was the first to come here.

Asked whether this capped an already adventurous career, Dr. Ives replied gravely, "This is the only dramatic incident that has happened to me."

He read the British appeal in a newspaper April 21. The American Red Cross received his inquiry the next day.

"I had been thinking of what I could do to help," he said in explanation of his quick response.

Permitted By Draft Board

He was given permission to leave the country by his local Selective Service Board in Rochester. There his local number is 1592. The board would probably have reached the number 900 in July, so his chance of being called was remote.

After he arrives in England, he will decide whether to serve with the Royal Army Medical Corps with the armed forces, or with the civilian Emergency Medical Service on the home front. Hereafter, however, doctors volunteering in the Red Cross appeal will be asked to decide before going over, officials here said yesterday.

Granted Year's Leave

Dr. Ives has been granted a year's leave of absence by the Mayo Foundation. He is in the second year of a three-year surgical fellowship at the Mayo Clinic, and expects to take it up again after this year abroad. He received his medical degree from Yale Medical School in 1937 and served on the staffs of Rhode Island Hospital, Providence, R. I., the Twillingate, Newfoundland Hospital, and the New Haven (Conn.) Hospital before going to Mayo Clinic.

In the series of steps by which his departure for England was arranged, his application was approved by the special committee of the Division of Medical Sciences of the National Research Council. The committee includes representatives of the American Medical Association and of the American Colleges of Surgeons and Physicians. An examination at the Mayo Clinic showed him to be physically fit. He then was found eligible for a British visa, and received permission from the Selective Service Board to leave.

Mrs. Abbott's Funeral Tomorrow

Mrs. Abbott had liver here about 12 years. Besides her sister, she is survived by a son, John S. Abbott, 1709 N Street Northwest.

New York Cotton

By the Associated Press

New York, May 13.—Bullish sentiment continued rampant in the cotton futures market today and at the highest some contracts were ahead nearly $3 a bale.

Developments in Washington indicating early adoption of the long-pondered plan for giving raw cotton and certain other agricultural products a loan value at 85 per cent of parity price galvanized the buying movement into great activity.

Final quotations for contracts in the New York cotton exchange were 48 to 57 points higher.

Demand was broad enough to absorb a considerable amount of hedge selling without serious interruption to the forward swing.

The precipitant rise in the raw fiber had immediate repercussions in Worth Street. Cloth buyers came in force and prices were marked up ¼ to ⅜ of a cent a yard on a number of print and broadcloth numbers.

Exports yesterday, 6,289 bales; season so far, 916,397. Port receipts, 16,553 bales. Port stocks, 3,368,067 bales.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, May 13 (AP).—Stimulated by a conference committee agreement on 85 per cent of parity loan rates on five agricultural commodities, grain and provision prices hiked briskly upward today.

Reports from Washington that Senate and House Conference Committee members had agreed on the 85 per cent plan rather than the 75 per cent parity loan plan which a House passed bill called for and which the Administration was said to favor, led to an early bulge in prices. Wheat advanced more than 2 cents a bushel and corn was up a cent at the start.

Later reactions under pressure of sales for collection of profits dropped wheat gains about a cent, but considerable buying supported the market and prices later advanced again.

At the close, wheat was about ⅛ cent under the day's high levels and 1⅛-2 cents above yesterday's finish; May, 97⅛; July, 95⅜-95½; corn, ⅛-1¼ up; May, 75⅝; July, 72⅞-72¾; oats, ¼-⅜ higher; soybeans, 3-3⅜ cents advanced; rye, ¼ lower to ⅝ higher, and lard, 7-13 up.

Bridge

You are declarer of today's hand at a three-spade contract, and West opens the diamond king. East overtakes with the ace, returns the jack to his partner's queen, and West then plays the ten. Plan your play from this point. The solution is given below.

Today's Hand

♡ 43
◇ 54
♣ KQJ1098

♠ A3
♡ KJ7
◇ KQ106
♣ 32

EAST ♠ J, ♡ Q9862, ◇ AJ, ♣ A6532

SOUTH ♠ KQ87654, ♡ A105, ◇ 987, ♣ None

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
3 ♣	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: K ◇.

South makes his contract by discarding his heart loser in dummy and the diamond loser from his hand simultaneously, deliberately refusing to trump the diamond lead, as he is fearful that East can overtrump. Declarer must lose a heart trick in any event, and so this play accomplishes two things—it clears the way for the needed heart ruff and it gives the opponents their tricks without risking an overruff. West leads a heart after taking the third diamond and declarer takes with the ace, ruffs a heart in dummy, enters his hand with a club ruff when East puts on the ace and trumps his last heart in dummy. He now has but to give up a spade to the ace and makes his three-spade bid, losing three diamonds and one trump trick.

If West plays the ace and another trump instead of leading a heart to trick four South can still make his contract. He has two trump entries to dummy with which to ruff out East's ace of clubs.

Lampkin Asks $100,000 for Alienation

Phil Lampkin, musical director of Washington's new Radio Station WWDC, filed suit for $100,000 in District Court yesterday against Sam A. Galanty, movie executive, charging Galanty with alienating the affections of his wife, Kathryn.

The complaint said the Lampkins were married October 30, 1935, and lived happily together until the autumn of 1939 when Galanty entered the picture. At that time,

MRS. KATHRYN LAMPKIN

Galanty, 45, who lives at the Broadmoor Apartments, 3601 Connecticut Avenue Northwest, could not be reached last night for comment. He is divisional exchange manager of Columbia Pictures, with offices at 926 New Jersey Avenue Northwest.

Also unavailable for comment was Lampkin, who was orchestra leader at Loew's Capitol and the old Fox Theaters for seven years until little over a year ago. More recently he was leader of a theater orchestra in Baltimore.

The 35-year-old musician is the divorced husband of Marguerite LeMarr, vaudeville and motion picture player.

His present wife, who is 25 years old, said last night there was no basis for her husband's suit against Galanty. Reached at her residence in the Clifton Terrrace Apartments, she said, "I am still living with Mr. Lampkin."

SUPERMAN — HOOKED — BY JERRY SIEGEL AND JOE SHUSTER

UNAWARE THAT LIL DANVERS HAS DELIBERATELY DRIVEN OFF A CLIFF IN ORDER TO DRAW SUPERMAN INTO A TRAP, THE MAN OF TOMORROW NARROWLY RESCUES HER FROM DEATH..
YOU'RE LUCKY I HAPPENED TO COME ALONG IN TIME OR YOU WOULDN'T BE ALIVE! YOU SHOULD DRIVE MORE CAREFULLY!
I RECOGNIZE YOU! YOU'RE SUPERMAN!—BUT I WAS DRIVING CAUTIOUSLY!
THEN HOW DID YOUR CAR HAPPEN TO PLUNGE OFF THAT CLIFF?
THERE'S ONLY ONE EXPLANATION I CAN THINK OF, I'M SANDRA PIERSON. I BELIEVE MY GUARDIAN MUST HAVE DONE SOMETHING TO THAT CAR!
YOU MEAN—YOUR GUARDIAN WANTED YOU TO BE KILLED?
YES, SO THAT HE COULD SEIZE THE FORTUNE I'VE INHERITED! I'VE LONG SUSPECTED UNCLE JOHN!
COME SANDRA! I'D LIKE TO PAY THIS UNCLE OF YOURS A SOCIAL CALL!
THEN—YOU'LL HELP ME?
(HOW ABSURDLY SIMPLE IT WAS TO TRICK HIM!—")

JOE PALOOKA — SIGHTED — BY HAM FISHER

JANE ARDEN — Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. — WHERE IS THE MONEY? — BY MONTE BARRETT AND RUSSELL ROSS

WHEN RIGGS' FIRST ATTEMPT TO MURDER CAROL FAILED, HE BROUGHT IN THIS GANGSTER—
A GANGSTER—WHAT GOOD IS HIS WORD AGAINST MINE?
IT'S BETTER THAN YOURS—
HE HAS CONFESSED THAT RIGGS HIRED HIM TO KILL CAROL—FOR HALF THE FORTUNE!
YOU DOUBLE-CROSSED ME—YOU BEAT ME TO THE MONEY AFTER I SNATCHED THE GIRL—
HOW ABOUT IT, INSPECTOR? WHAT'S THE CASE AGAINST THESE TWO?
ATTEMPTED MURDER—THAT TAKES CARE OF THEM!
BUT HOW ABOUT THIS MONEY THEY WERE ALL AFTER? WHERE IS IT?

"And when you get to Washington, you tell our Congressman, if he values our vote, he'll wangle some defense orders for us!"

Listen!

with Glynn

A gentleman with the appropriately Latin-sounding name of Juan Arvizu is the Columbia Broadcasting System's latest ambassador of good will among the Americas.

You can hear him over WJSV at 9:30 tonight—and also on Mondays and Fridays—doing some solid promotion of same in a universal language, that of music.

For Senor Arvizu is one of the most highly regarded interpreters of Latin-American ballads and folk songs south of the Rio Grande. The Latin-Americas love him with something approaching passion—shucks, it is passion—as witness the fact that one of his most recent recordings has sold more than 50,000 copies, with lots of others doing approximately the same.

He is, therefore, the first major artist to be signed by CBS for its network of 64 radio stations throughout Latin-America, and in the meatime he is giving United States' listeners an idea of why he's become so popular there.

Senor Arvizu was born at Queretaro, about 150 miles from Mexico City. He was soprano soloist with the 150-voice Orfeon de Queretaro between the ages of 7 and 12. At 18 he joined an opera company in Mexico City. He's been a concert and radio favorite throughout South and Central America ever since, which is about ten years.

His favorite song is "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes."

Foreign Chief Of Argentina Greeted Here

By the Associated Press

Dr. Enrique Ruiz-Guinazu, Argentine foreign minister and the first Argentine cabinet member to pay an official visit to this Capital, arrived yesterday afternoon and was welcomed by a contingent of officials headed by Secretary of State and Mrs. Hull.

The foreign minister, with his wife, three daughters and a son and secretary, was escorted to the blue-carpeted Presidential room of the station for the official welcoming.

There the visitors met the Secretary and Mrs. Hull, Undersecretary and Mrs. Welles, Laurence Duggan, political adviser on Latin America to the Secretary, and Mrs. Duggan; Phillip Bonsal, chief of the division of Latin American republics of the State Department, and Mrs. Bonsal; Rear Admiral George Pettengill, commandant of the Washington Navy Yard, representing Admiral Harold R. Stark; Brig. Gen. Sherman T. Miles, representing Chief of Staff Gen. George C. Marshall, and members of the Argentine Embassy staff, including First Secretary and Senora de Pardo, Second Secretary and Senora de Scilingo, Second Secretary Jorge Escalante Posse, Capt. Alberto R. Brunet, Naval and Air Attache and his staff and Col. Pedro Zanni, Air and Military Attache and his aides.

Dr. Felipe A. Espil, the Argentine Ambassador, and Senora de Espil, who met the party in New York, traveled with them to Washington.

George T. Summerlin, chief of protocol of the State Department, with Dr. Carlos Pardo, first secretary of embassy, greeted the minister and his family as they stepped off their private coach.

A few minutes late, escorted by motorcycle police sounding their sirens, the party traveled by automobile to the Larz Anderson House, official residence for distinguished visitors provided by the United States Government.

Hess Is Reported To Have $4,000,000 Outside Germany

Rudolf Hess had no money with him when he made his bizarre landing in Scotland, according to cable dispatches.

However, like other high-ranking Nazis, Hess is reportedly a wealthy man and even now, away from Germany, probably would be able to write a check for a sizable amount.

In September, 1939, "one of the oldest and most famous institutions of its kind in the world"—presumably the Bank of England—estimated that Hess was worth $4,000,000. This was in cash and insurance, of which $1,482,500 was on his own life and $380,000 on his wife's life. He was credited with having $2,245,000 in cash, mostly in Swiss and Dutch currency, held through three agents and four banks in Sao Paulo, Brazil, and Basle, Switzerland.

Pan American Navy Visioned By LaGuardia

New York, May 13 (AP).—Mayor F. H. LaGuardia told visiting Latin American naval officers today he dreamed of the day when all American navies became a "great Pan American navy."

"A Pan American navy will take a long time to realize," he asserted, "but it is coming. I envision also a Pan American naval academy in which young officers of all the American navies would be trained in defense together."

The representatives of the navies of Brazil, Argentina, Uruguay, Peru, Mexico, Colombia and Cuba are visiting New York as a part of a tour of the United States.

Senate Vote of 40 to 38 Seats Rosier, W. Va. Appointee of Neely

By Hedley Donovan
Post Staff Writer

Administration forces yesterday won a narrow victory as the Senate voted, 40 to 38, to seat Dr. Joseph Rosier, Democrat and college president, as junior Senator from West Virginia.

The Senate roll call, its first in six years on a dispute over seating of a Senator, came after three solid days of debate on the West Virginia law and politics.

Dr. Rosier, head of the Fairmont State Teachers College, is the appointee of Matthew Neely, former Senator from West Virginia and now Governor of the State.

Neely, elected last November, resigned his Senate seat at midnight January 12 and simultaneously appointed Dr. Rosier as his successor. The outgoing Governor, Homer Holt, contended there was an interim between Neely's resignation as Senator and his assumption of the Governor's office. Also at midnight, Holt appointed Clarence E. Martin, former president of the American Bar Association, as Senator.

The roll call vote came when Senator Chandler (Democrat), of Kentucky, moved to reverse the recommendation of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, which had voted 9 to 8 in favor of seating Rosier. When Chandler's amendment was defeated, the Senate then approved the committee resolution on a voice vote.

Senator Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico, said it was "ridiculous to ask us to determine a mad race between two Governors seeking to name a Senator at midnight."

Majority Leader Barkley, of Kentucky, termed the midnight appointments by both Governors "an unseemly, indecent scramble," but said the responsibility for the confusion rested with Holt for "attempting to prevent the incoming Governor from exercising the power the people had awarded him."

Holt was described by Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, as "the lamest duck I've ever seen, trying to perpetuate his power by projecting an appointment into the Senate."

The last Senate vote on a seating dispute also involved West Virginia's representation. The Senate on June 24, 1935, voted to seat Rush Holt, whose credentials had been disputed on the grounds that he was only 29 years old at the time of his election the previous November.

Democrats for—Adams, Andrews, Bailey, Bulow, Byrd, Chandler, Clark (Idaho), Clark (Mo.), George, Gerry, Gillette, Glass, Johnson (Colo.), Maloney, McCarran, Radcliffe, Smith, Tydings, Walsh, Wheeler—20.

Republicans for—Austin, Ball, Barbour, Brewster, Brooks, Burton, Butler, Capper, Danaher, Gurney, Holman, McNary, Taft, Thomas (Idaho), Tobey, White, Wiley, Willis—18.

Against the Motion (40)

Democrats against—Bankhead, Barkley, Bilbo, Bone, Bunker, Byrnes, Connally, Downey, Ellender, Green, Guffey, Hatch, Hayden, Herring, Hill, Hughes, Kilgore, Lee, Lucas, McFarland, Mead, Murdock, Murray, O'Mahoney, Overton, Pepper, Reynolds, Russell, Schwartz, Smathers, Spencer, Stewart, Thomas (Okla.), Truman, Tunnell, Van Nuys, Walsren—37.

Republican against—Davis—1.

The following pairs were announced:

Vandenberg (Republican) for the motion and McKellar (Democrat) against, Shipstead (Republican) for and Wagner (Democrat) against, Nye (Republican) for and Chavez (Democrat) against, Lodge (Republican) for and Caraway (Democrat) against, Bridges (Republican) for and Thomas (Utah) (Democrat) against, Johnson (Calif.) (Republican) for and Brown (Democrat) against, Aiken (Republican) for and Langer (Republican) against.

Senators Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, and Reed (Republican), of Kansas, were paired, but no announcement was made of Senator Harrison's position. Senator Reed was announced as supporting the motion.

Money Bill 'Joker' Passed By Committee

By the Associated Press

A bill extending the President's monetary powers for two years won approval of the House Coinage Committee so quickly yesterday that an amendment designed to forestall further devaluation of the dollar slipped into the measure almost unnoticed.

Acting Chairman Cochran (Democrat), of Missouri, said he would recall the members today and in the hope that the full Democratic strength would be present, would attempt to eliminate the amendment.

"Some of the boys didn't know what they were voting for," Cochran said. "We'll have the votes tomorrow to knock the amendment out. That proposition would certainly tie the President's hands."

The bill would extend for two years from June 30 the Treasury's stabilization fund and the President's devaluation power. But Representative Andresen (Republican), of Minnesota, sponsored an amendment, reported to have been accepted 9 to 7, to provide that "no additional amounts of foreign gold shall be purchased" at more than $35 an ounce—the current price.

That would have the effect, he said, of preventing further dollar devaluation by purchase of foreign gold at a price up to $41 an ouce, the existing maximum.

He said that the President still could continue to purchase domestic gold at more than $35, but in that case, Americans rather than a foreign government "would get the benefit." The amount that could be purchased domestically would not be enough to permit a further devaluation of any magnitude, he argued.

The votes on the amendment and the bill itself came after the committee, dividing along party lines, refused to command Marriner Eccles, Federal Reserve Board chairman, to appear to testify on the legislation.

The Reserve Board in January said in a report that certain emergency monetary powers should not be renewed. Eccles was "invited" by the committee to appear as a witness but sent word that "he had no desire to be heard."

Andresen then reported that Eccles had told him he would be glad to comply with a "request" that he appear. Thereupon Andresen offered a motion saying that Eccles "be specifically requested to appear." The motion was defeated 8 to 6.
